A helpful town

One test or measure of character has to be performance under tragic circumstances. It is essential that when disaster strikes, someone is ready and willing to help those affected. The well being of any society hinges upon the ability of its members to interact with, depend upon and help one another.

That is why this holiday season has brought a reaffirmation of all that is good about Carmel. When tragedy hit one of Carmel's families, the community rose to the challenge.

In early December, 22-month-old Avdul Pula, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mersin Pula, was struck by an automobile and dragged for over 200 feet. The incident occurred on 6th Street, by Devendorf Plaza. The driver, apparently unaware that the child had been struck, drove away and has never been located. The Pula boy was seriously injured and ultimately had to have a hand and an ear amputated.

Some Carmel citizens learned that the family had no medical insurance and quickly established the Pula Medical Fund, hoping to raise money to help defray medical expenses.

Once the ball got rolling, many in the community became involved. A number of businesses held benefits, climaxing with a fundraiser at the Carmel Plaza.

Esperanto, the Harbinger, the Hog's Breath Inn and many other businesses and individuals have contributed their time, efforts and money to help the victim of a tragic accident.

Some $5,000 has been raise through these benefits. It has been learned that medical expenses for the boy will be covered by agencies and the money raised has been set aside for the child's education or other future expenses.

It is heartwarming to learn that a sophisticated, wealthy community has not lost its sense of humanity. In all the hectic rushing around of the holidays, Carmel found time to help one of its own. Little Avdul Pula lost an arm and an ear, but gained a town full of friends.

Planner's defense

Dear Editor:

Since several members of the Planning Commission are away, I am replying - unofficially - to Mr. Larry Pearson's letter in the 26th Dec. Pine Cone pertaining to the prohibition of certain businesses.

He writes that our Chairwoman stated that we did not accept outside inputs and that the Commission knows what is best for Carmel. This is a most regretable impression which we must have given. Under the circumstances of a heavy agenda to clear prior to the next Council meeting it is, to a large extent, understandable.

Let me give some background - we have worked 4 months on this revision to an existing ordinance. Our Chairwoman had appointed the then president of the Carmel Business Association to serve on the committee. There has been considerable discussion, fully covered in the newspapers, on this proposed revision. Prior to the 18 Dec. meeting there had been a Public Hearing at which there had been no input from individuals or groups. Prior to the 18 Dec. meeting we phoned 9 individuals representing the whole community to let them know of the meeting and hoping they would come to give us their opinions

What the attorney for the Carmel Business District Property Owners Association suggested was that he sit in with the committee on the writing of the revisions - it was this suggestion that our Chairwoman took exception to as our revisions had already been written with our City Attorney.

Mr. Pearson, may I assure you that the Planning Commission does its very best to study all problems from all sides and makes every effort to be fair in the interests of Carmel.

A good man

Dear Editor:

Before your appraisal is made of a man six foot tall and handsome, speak to him and look into his eyes. If he has integrity, his eyes will tell you so.

Ask him if he has shared his earthly worth with his loved ones, and if his answer is yes, you will know he is respected and loved by neighbor.

Ask him if he would choose to have his wishes for earthly things fulfilled, or rather, would he choose to be judged by his maker as a "Good Samaritan." If his answer to the latter is yes, judge him then as a good man.

Don't blame Christ

Dear Editor:

Enjoyed the C. Austin de Camp letter on lack of sense of purpose, but am in disagreement on a couple minor points. What he calls sense of purpose is probably about the same as what I refer to as national goals. It is interesting that we came full circle, although some of us to not yet recognize, that we have. Our so-called civilization, with survival as its goal, won out against disease and ignorance until it grew so strong it was able to destroy almost everything in its path and got so intelligent it could develop life-destroying weapons that represent a greater threat to the survival of the species than the saber-toothed tiger ever thought of being.

In somewhat similar manner America's original national goal of survival as a nation demanded considerable cooperation, but after most of the Indians were killed off the pursuit of money came more and more into the forefront as a national goal. America, too, has come full circle with a condition brought on largely by greed threatening to collapse our economy and put us back where we started, except that the problems to be overcome are much more complicated and difficult than sniping at passing British redcoats. An unbiased visitor from another planet might take one startled look and suggest we discard money-making as a national goal and work together unselfishly to save our county, but he would, of course, be wasting his time. This would require a hitherto undiscovered method whereby some idiots we have in Washington could make a profit while acting in a responsible manner, and in addition, some means of forcing the average citizen to care what happens to his country, which would be definitely un-Constitutional.

At any rate, I don't think Christ and his part in founding a major world religion should be blamed for what man has done to our earth and to his fellow man. In case Christ does someday come back for a visit I would dearly love to see his expression when proudly told by the Pentagon that the slaughter we perpetrated in Indochina was done in his name - that a million people were blown apart and burned up there by us Christians; not to preserve anybody's freedom, but to suppress freedom and make money for some people totally unprincipled but in a position to dictate foreign policy for America.

It is a rank disservice to Christ that we use his name to justify such actions. The idea that there is some kind of an all good, all powerful God, that knowingly permits us to behave in such a manner, is difficult for me to picture, and I firmly believe that our almost total hypocrisy is a major reason for the decline of interest in religion today. Our younger generation simply can't swallow it.

I'm glad to know that those were out-of-town contractors who were doing all that "leaning."

You can be sure that if local contractors were involved they would be straight and upstanding if they had to put a lien on any owner.

figure has been calculated by the city planning ment and is based on "concept plans" submitted by t office department which call for a three-level facility would include a lower level completely devoted to parking, an intermediate level devoted to mail han- and postal service employee parking, and an upper evoted to mail pick-up (in Carmel's traditional post- box fashion) and parking for patrons of both the post and Sunset Center.

parking issue will almost certainly weigh heavily on inds of city officials as final negotiations are un- en with state representatives of the Postal Depart- Both Mayor Bernard Anderson and Carmel Post- r Frank Ledezma agree that a settlement will probably ched on the new facility within three to four months. nel Planning Director Bob Griggs discussed the g issue last week. He said that while the present sunset g lot affords roughly 125 spaces to the public, lower arking facilities in the proposed post office complex afford 105 all day spaces to shoppers, business people, e general public.

he upper level of the complex, which would be on the level as San Carlos Street, 82 spaces would be provided st office patrons during the day and Sunset Center s in the evening. Postal employees would be provided ces on the intermediate level of the facility.

ggs explained further that parking congestion at the end of the commercial district would be reduced by the y. The small lot at the corner of Dolores and 5th, now l for 10 minute parking and used exclusively by post patrons, would be freed for longer term parking by ers. While post employees now are not provided with all arking by shoppers. While postal employees now are ovided with all day parking spaces and are forced to n the residential zone north of 5th Street, Griggs stated, ng congestion in the area would be eased.

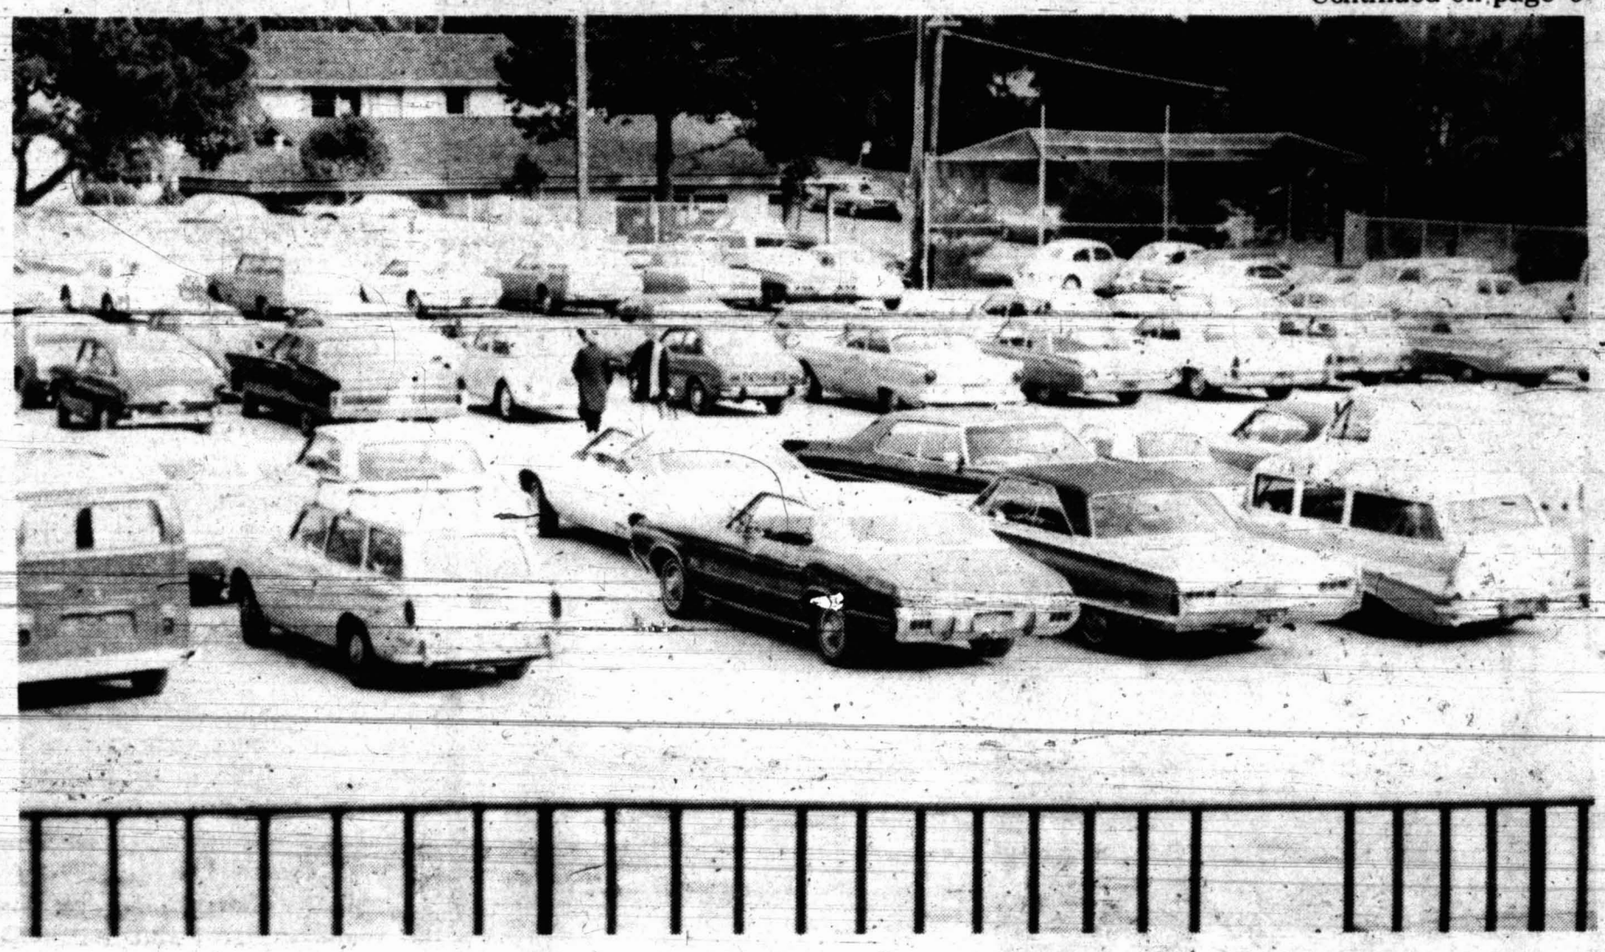

The Post Office Department has submitted only vague plans for the proposed Sunset facility, and has agreed to allow Carmel to hire its own architect for final drawings. One can however, glean a rough vision of the complex from plans submitted thus far.

The three levels of the complex would cover the entire area of the present parking lot. The lower level, while not entirely underground, would be a few feet below the level of Mission Street. Motorists would enter lower level parking from Mission Street, and descend a few feet into the parking area.

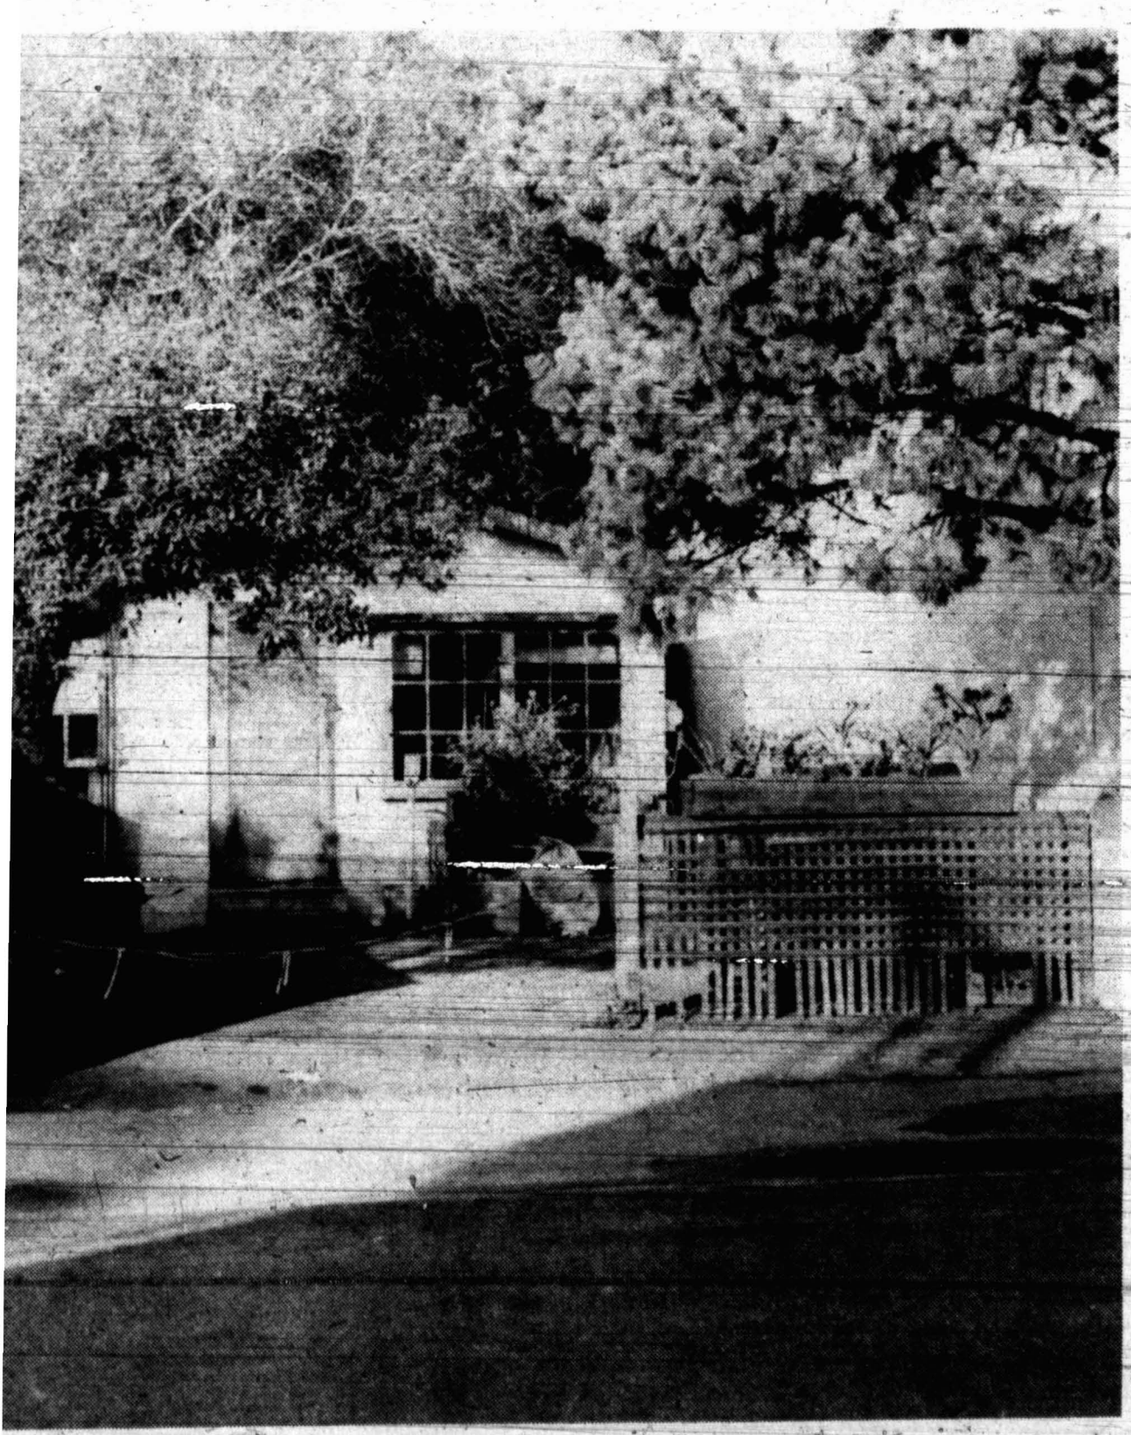

The upper level of the complex, at the height of San Carlos, would include a one story building of approximately 7000 square feet. Mail box pick-up and services to post office patrons would be provided in that building. Facing on San Carlos, it would be centered between the northern end of Sunset Center and 8th Avenue. Vehicle access to the upper level would be from San Carlos.

The intermediate level would be the exclusive province of postal service activities. An enclose structure of 13,288

Bank to tear down Rinky-Dink

The wheels of development keep turning in the commercial district.

"We are mindful of the beauty of Carmel," said Robert Giraudo, manager of the new Carmel branch of Monterey Savings and Loan. "We do not want to detract from it. In fact, we want to add to it if possible."

Ribbon cutting ceremonies were held two weeks ago for the new bank branch on San Carlos just north of 6th. While business is now being conducted out of an old Carmel home which was remodeled for the bank's purposes, plans call for development of three lots on the corner of San Carlos and 6th.

Monterey Saving's development scheme, while "mindful of the beauty of Carmel," calls for destruction of one of the city's most colorful and distinctive enterprises.

The Rinky Dink Restaurant, which will be 20 years old in May, is now fated for destruction. Bob Littlefield, president of Monterey Savings, has informed Jim Kelsey, proprietor of "The Dink" that he may continue doing business on a month by month basis until the bank decides to proceed with development of the property.

"That's one of the things we're concerned about," said Littlefield last week. "But it looks like in time the Rinky Dink will have to go."

Almost hidden from view of passing motorists and pedestrians, the Rinky Dink looks more like a tool shed than a restaurant. With a seating capacity of nine, it is open at breakfast and lunch on those days when Kelsey isn't hunting. When "The Dink" is open, it is full. And its clientele, mainly male in gender, is largely long time residents of Carmel.

Many consider the Rinky Dink a deeply rooted Carmel tradition. Talk around the counter often recalls the time when students at Sunset School "walked over to Kelsey's to hook a cheese-dink."

The Sunset School is now a cultural center, but cheese-dinks remain. Kelsey's special cheesburgers served on waxed paper (without a plate). And food over the Rinky-Dink counter can still be "hooked," paid for on an I.O.U. basis.

Kelsey, a Carmel native is a volunteer fireman, little league umpire, and involved in a number of other community activities. Along with his wife "Franky," he still knows virtually everyone in the place.

"I'm going to stay open as long as I can," he said last week. "I haven't had a chance to sit down and talk with him (Robert Littlefield), and I'll be doing that next. I wanted to save the bad news until after Christmas."

"No," he continued, "I don't know what I'd do. I don't want to get any bigger. I just want the Rinky Dink to stay the way it is."

Spokesman for Monterey Savings have stated that plans for development of the corner tract are tentative, and Giraudo stated last week that the status of the Rinky Dink is "under study."

Another bit of Carmel tradition on the hands of planners for the Monterey Savings facility is the old home which has now been renovated for a temporary office. The home is 61 years old, and was the original home of the Leidig family of Carmel.

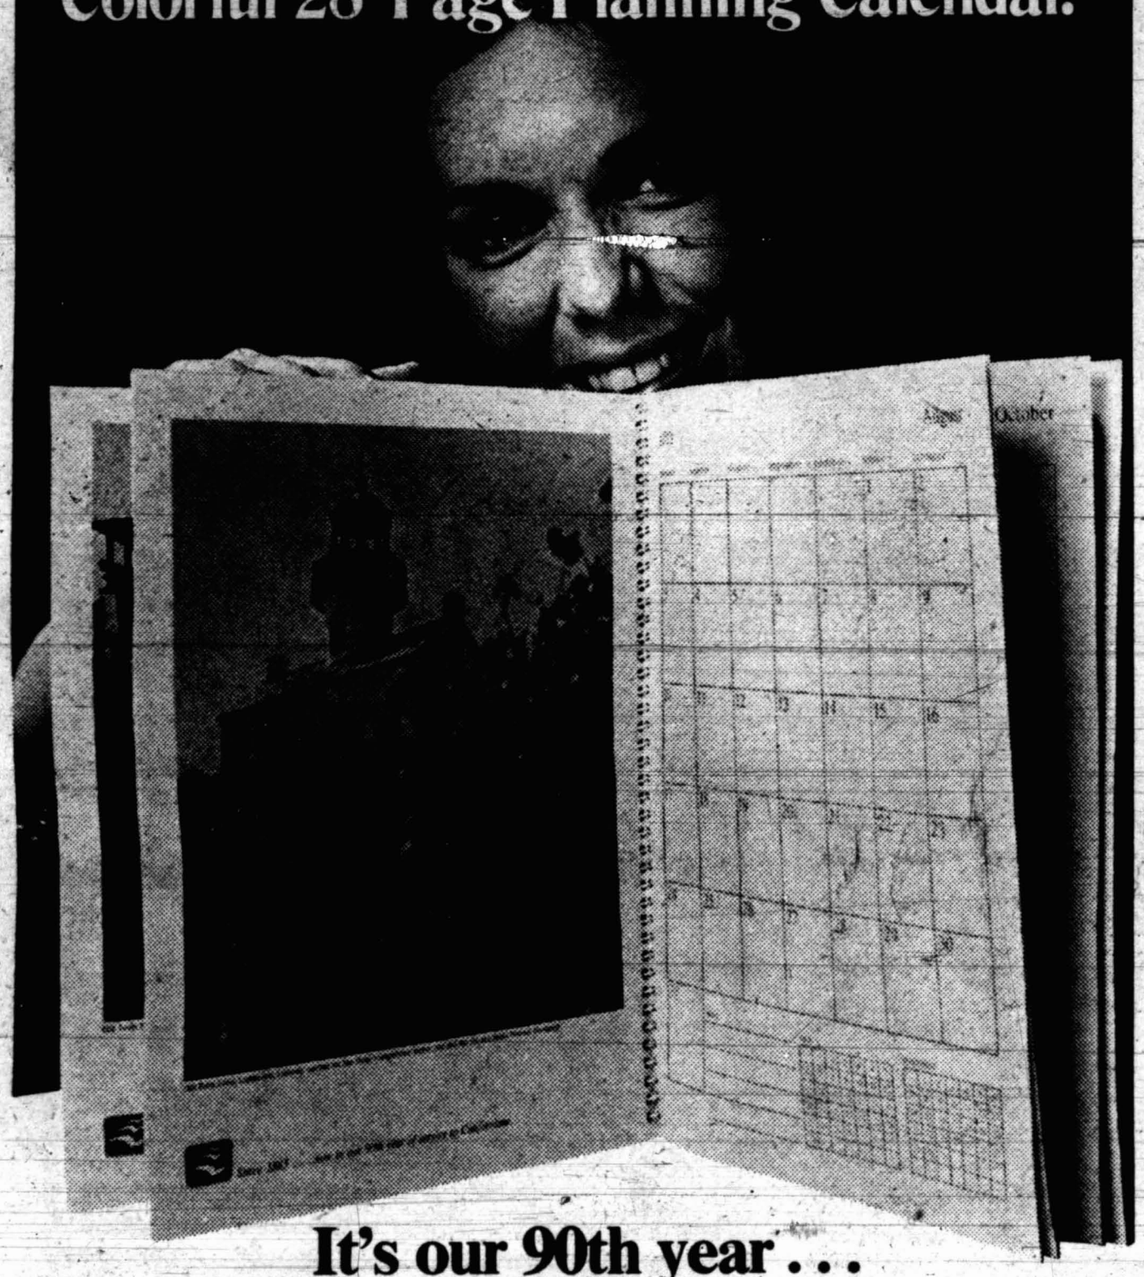

Dale Leidig, who negotiated a long term lease with Monterey Savings for development of the property said the building is "one of the original Carmel homes." He explained that, in 1935, it had been moved from the corner of San Carlos and 7th (the site of the Leidig Texaco Station) to its present location.

In the public interest

By RALPH NADER

Albert W. Turner was once an executive with Southern California Gas Co. Today as chairman of the California Occupational Safety and Health Standards Board, he has leashed out at industrial and commercial criticism of the federal Job Health and Safety Standards. Such criticism, he charged "demonstrates complete lack of knowledge."

"The reason for the federal law," Mr. Turner said, "was that a significant number of employers and state governments were openly neglecting the safety and health of workers and were extremely reluctant to spend the money necessary to provide a reasonable degree of protection."

Companies are still reluctant. What's more, led by the callous U.S. Chamber of Commerce and other trade associations, industry is trying to link the worker health and safety movement with the inflationary-recessionary problems of the economy.

Like auto safety and pollution control standards, job safety and the environment are emerging as handy scapegoats for business mismanagement of the economy. What easier way is there to focus public attention on the "big bad feds" in Washington and to divert attention from the waste-ridden, oversubsidized, excessively concentrated terrain of big business? Why some shareholders or reporters might otherwise get the idea that those unlaid-off corporate executives were incompetent and unable to really start competing over who can best serve instead of gouge the consumer.

Rather than striving for some old fashioned Yankee ingenuity, these executive millionaires are spending more and more time in Washington urging bigger amounts of existing corporate welfare (tax credits and other relief) and a safety moratorium. On December 16th, Henry Ford II and Ford President Lee Iacocca were meeting privately with the Michigan congressional delegation in the morning and the Republican House and Senate leaders in the afternoon. GM's chairman, Thomas Murphy, has been lobbying in Washington also.

In the meantime, Ford ignores a large group of its dealers who are asking the company to lower its new-care prices $200 to $400 to stop declining sales. But the price increases continue. When the seatbelt interlock was taken off recently, the auto companies did not reduce the price of their cars by $50 to $90 which they said was the price increase attributed to that system last year. This resulted in a hidden price increase, despite recent leveling off or declining metals prices charged by the auto industry's suppliers.

Next year, Congress needs to initiate comprehensive economic, environmental and health programs by showing how beneficially related they can be to one another. For example, as Environmental Protection Agency Chief, Russell E. Train, declared in October: "Our environmental, energy and economic interests converge to put a premium upon greater and greater efficiency in the industrial process -- a new efficiency which can, at one and the same time, cut costs, conserve energy and curb pollution -- a new efficiency which I am convinced can help attack our inflation problem."

Carl Gerstacher of Dow Chemical has spoken of the profits his company derives from controlling its chemical pollutants. Others have noted that environmental expenditures create jobs, markets, health and a more hopeful future for future generations. The amount of money the economy must spend to win the pollution battle over the next twenty years is less than Americans will spend on alcohol.

What madness comes forth from corporate suites which tell the people that they cannot afford less than 5 percent of pretax corporate taxes for tax subsidized investments to prevent cancer, respiratory diseases, harmful mutations and other destructions of health solidly associated with industrial chemicals, gases, particulates and other injurious emissions? Can anything have a higher priority when so much of their expenditures go to waste, trivia, junk and inefficiency. What, after all, is the purpose of an economic system, if it is not, first and foremost, to safeguard the health and safety of its peoples?

The scapegoat strategy of industry and commerce, designed to divert attention from the concentrated corporate economy and its management, may get some quick headlines now. But when Congress convenes next month, these same executives may receive invitations to come up and publicly testify with disclosure of cost, productivity and other date they are not presenting in their private huddles on Capitol Hill.

President Littlefield, while referring to final development of the corner tract as "a long ways down the road," said the old house would probably be moved to another location to make room for construction of a new building.

He said the bank's plans for development of a Carmel branch are now viewed in three phases. He termed the current branch office on San Carlos as "Phase one, our apprenticeship in Carmel."

Phase two, in the banks view, might involve renovation of the service station on the corner of San Carlos and Sixth for a somewhat bigger facility. The station's canopy would be removed and landscaping of the property would be undertaken. During that phase of development, the old Leidig house could be rented out for professional use.

Phase three would be construction of a permanent bank building. The bank holds a lease on three commercial lots which are now covered by their temporary office, the corner service station and the Rinky Dink.

While bank officials emphasize that any final development would include extensive open space and landscaping, they indicate that all three existing buildings would eventually be removed.

William Concolino of Monterey is the bank's architect. As an example of Monterey Savings' intention to "enhance the property," he pointed out that a small oak tree had already been planted on the property in front of the temporary office.

"People in Carmel are concerned about new developments detracting from the traditional character," he said. "But Monterey Savings just doesn't do anything unless they do a first class job."

Littlefield stated that the bank is in "no hurry" to develop a permanent facility in Carmel. While the bank is now planning new branches in Pacific Grove, Gilroy, and Monterey, he said "frankly, Carmel is not our top priority at the moment."

"The rate of increase in Carmel deposits will determine the speed with which we proceed on the project," he said, speculating that it will be a number of years before final completion of a permanent bank facility on the Carmel site.

State to get fish, wildlife funds

Pine Cone
Washington Bureau

California's more than 2.8 million licensed fisherman and hunters will benefit, because of the sportsmen equipment they have bought, from the $3.1 million in federal aid funds for fish and wildlife restoration and hunter safety programs in the state.

The funds, which are part of the $70.3 million Federal Aid to Fish and Wildlife Restoration Program for use in fiscal 1975, are being apportioned for distribution to the 50 states, Puerto Rico, American Samoa, Guam, and the Virgin Islands by the Department of Interior.

California, which has 2,199,190 licensed fishermen and 641,319 licensed hunters, will receive $3,150,510 in funds. $2,171,510 is for wildlife restoration, $136,500 is for hunter safety programs, and $842,500 is for fish restoration, according to Interior's Fish and Wildlife Service figures.

The funds are raised through excise tax receipts collected on hunting and fishing equipment nationwide, according to Marsha Mulligan of the Fish and Wildlife Service.

"The government puts a tax on people who will receive from the (fish and wildlife) programs," she said.

According to Mulligan, the nationwide program breaksdown as follows:

Wildlife restoration funds are raised with money from all 11 percent excise tax on sporting arms and ammunition and a 10 percent tax on pistols and revolvers and are distributed based on the number of hunting license holders in each state. They are used on state approved wildlife projects such as the acquisition, development, and management of habitat for game species.

Distribution of hunter safety funds is based on a state's general population. They are used for state hunter education programs such as the operation of public target programs. Funds for this program may also be used for wildlife restoration projects.

Fish restoration funds are raised from a 10 percent excise tax on fishing equipment and are distributed according to the number of fishing license holders in each state plus the area of each state. With these funds, states purchase, rehabilitate and maintain lakes and lake facilities for fishermen and perform research to aid in the management of sport fisheries.

The wildlife restoration and hunter safety programs fall under the Pittman-Robertson act of 1937, while the Fish restoration programs are granted under funds from the 1950 Dingel-Johnson Act.

Murphy proposes freezing property tax assessments

A constitutional amendment which, for tax purposes, would freeze the current value of most homes in California has been introduced by Assemblyman Frank Murphy, Jr.

Murphy's proposal (ACA 22) would set the property tax value of any home which is the taxpayer's principal place of residence at the purchase price of the home. If adopted by the legislature and approved by the voters, the provision would be written into the California Constitution.

The assessed value of homes for property tax purposes are now set each year by local tax assessors based on what is determined to be "fair market value." In most cases, the assessed value of a home continues to increase, raising the property tax bill each year.

Under Murphy's proposal, the value of a home for tax purposes would be set at its current value and would remain the same until the home was sold.

Only substantial improvements to the residence would otherwise raise the value of the home.

Murphy said the current practice of taxing a home at its "fair market value" is inequitable in that homeowners are seeing their property tax bills going up each year on homes that are virtually unchanged.

"Fair market value is an indicator of what the person could possible sell the home for on the open market," Murphy continued, "but if the person keeps the home, the property taxes should not increase because of the potential to sell it on the open market.

"Fair market value and fair tax value should not be the same," Murphy said.

Murphy pointed out that two years ago the Legislature set property tax rate limits on local governments. Tax rates now can only be raised to match inflation and increases in population. The purpose of the tax rate limits was to hold the line on property taxes.

"Limiting the tax rate has not held property taxes in line," Murphy said, "because increases in the assessed value of homes have added to tax bills.

Recession to affect county same as nation

The economy of Monterey County will suffer the same recessionary effects as the rest of the state and the nation through the first half of 1975, according to United California Bank (UCB).

While the economy is expected to improve the latter half of the year, measurements of most economic indicators in the county will reflect only modest growth.

The county outlook is reviewed in an economic forecast for the state and the nation prepared for the 12th consecutive year by the bank's Research and Planning Division under the direction of Chief Economist Dr. Raymond Jallow, senior vice president.

Median family income in the county will increase by 6.6 percent in 1975, according to the forecast, to $14,545. (The statewide average will be $15,265.)

The county will add 3,006 new residents, for a total population at year-end of 266,000.

The forecast of other economic indicators in Monterey County:

Non-agricultural employment, up 2.7 percent to an average of 75,000.

Total personal income, up by 8.9 percent to $1.77 billion.

Total retail sales, up 8.2 percent to $723 million.

Housing unit permits will equal 1974's 1,400 units.

Even with an improving economy in the last half of 1975, Jallow said, housing starts and auto sales will still be struggling along at depressed levels, and unemployment will continue to be a nagging problem for the state.

Nationally, the inflation rate will likely settle to 9 percent, he said, which will prevent any gain in real income of most American families.

square feet would be built to facilitate mail handling, and parking would be restricted to postal employees and postal vehicles.

One of the concerns of local planners in evaluating the tentative plans is what Griggs terms the "heavily horizontal quality" of the complex. To avoid a stark appearance, a great deal of landscaping would have to be undertaken on the upper level of the facility along San Carlos and 8th.

One other problem envisioned by Griggs (and suggested by high school students evaluating the proposal two weeks ago during a "Youth in Government" program at city hall) is conflicts which would arise while the complex is under construction.

If construction is underway next summer, for example, the city will be confronted with large crowds attending the Bach Festival at Sunset Center and a serious shortage of parking.

Negotiations between city officials and the Post Office department in the next few months will center around financial considerations. While the federal government will finance the entire project, the city of Carmel holds title to the Sunset Center property.

Essentially, a settlement on funding the project may well amount to a trade-off -- post-office use of city property for city use of post office parking. Griggs speculated that the post office department would like to buy the Sunset Center Site. In that case, the city would use funds accumulated through the land sale to lease lower level parking back from the post office.

One other possibility is that the city would offer a long-term lease to the post-office department for use of the property. In exchanged (possibly in lieu of a rental fee), the city would receive unrestricted use of the lower level parking lot.

Mayor Anderson has stated that the city is "keeping the matter open and has not made any final decisions on the Sunset proposal." However, many city officials agree that no other proposal for expanded postal facilities has been presented.

Acknowledging that many Carmel residents would like to see the post office stay where it is, Griggs said use of the present facility on an indefinite basis is "out of the question."

"They (the Post-Office Department) would have to condemn the building, and there's no way they're going to do that," he said. "They've got no parking where they are, and they don't have enough room to operate."

The only other proposal given serious consideration thus far has been one issued by the Post Office department, and rejected by city officials. Viewing unlimited parking and relatively inexpensive property at the mouth of Carmel Valley, representatives of the post-office suggested con- [illegible] outside of Carmel's city limits. The proposal would have involved substantial changed in the city's traditional form of mail service -- involving installation of house numbers, mail boxes, and residential mail delivery.

If the post office issue is, in fact, resolved in the early months of 1975, it will represent the culmination of efforts by Carmel city officials over a period of five years.

A use permit was first issued to the post-office department for the formulation of plans to build on the Sunset site in April of 1970.

In May of 1974, following four years of inactivity on the part of the post office, the city council held a public hearing with the intention of setting a termination date on that use permit. Council action at that time inspired more expedient planning from the post office. Concept plans for the facility at Sunset were received by the city in the early fall.

In formulating plans for the Sunset complex the Post Office Department has made several concessions in view of Carmel's unusual character.

Consistent with their policy in designing post office facilities through the country, the federal department had originally intended to construct on at least one acre of land (the Sunset parking lot amounts to substantially less than an acre), and put up a one story building (mail handling and delivery would be divided between two levels of the proposed Sunset complex.)

In fact, the post Office department is not required to conform to any local zoning or building restrictions when planning new facilities. Court rulings have made federal agencies immune to such municipal planning measures.

Griggs explained that the city would not have stopped a construction of a multi-story post office facility on Scenic drive, if postal officials had decided that is where it should go.

For the moment, the Sunset Center parking lot appears to be the likely site and post office planners seem to be moving rapidly. "They're working diligently," said Griggs.

Jerry Reynolds, a staff member of the Post Office department in San Bruno said last week, "Yes, we have pretty well concluded that a new facility will be built in Carmel. And I'm certain that a final agreement will be reached with the city in the next few months."

WE'RE UNHAPPY ABOUT YOUR PG&E BILL, TOO.

Every winter we point out that "the season's the reason" your PG&E bills go up. That's because during winter months you use more energy for heating, lighting, cooking, TV watching and other home comforts.

But this winter, bills will be even higher because of increased fuel costs. As you may know, most PG&E rate increases have been to offset the higher prices we, PG&E, must pay for natural gas and fuel oil.

We are continuing to work hard to be efficient and hold down your rates as much as possible. You can help hold down your PG&E bill too, by following these energy conservation tips.

Weatherstrip around doors and windows. Insulate walls and ceilings. Clean or replace furnace filters if necessary. Keep the fireplace damper closed when not in use. Close drapes at night, and set your thermostat no higher than 68°.

You'll also save energy by turning off lights and the TV when they're not in use. And by not preheating the oven. And tell the kids: "Shut that door!"

United Fund

VAC provides help to many groups

Over 77,000 hours of volunteer work on the Monterey Peninsula have been donated this year through the Volunteer Action Center, according to President Barbara Bucquet.

The center maintains a central office at 444 Pearl St. in Monterey and a staff to serve as a clearinghouse for community needs and services in order to channel voluntary action into areas of needs.

Mrs. Bucquet explains that these goals are achieved through information, recruitment, interviewing procedures, placement, referral and evaluation services for public and private non-profit organizations. The center also provides program development for individuals and sets up workshops for the community upon request.

In its second year as a United Fund agency, the VAC depends on the community funds campaign for about one third of its $50,000 annual budget.

In addition to providing a clearinghouse, the VAC conducts projects of its own and plans several for development during 1975 if funding is available.

Volunteers in Action staffs and provides a language bank in over 50 languages to provide Peninsula residents and visitors with translation aid when needed in daily life or in emergencies. Mrs. Bucquet says the service, operated cooperatively with the Defense Language Institute, has filled requests ranging from translating letters in German to a doctor in Berlin to find out about the health of an aging mother, to finding a Celtic phrase for a young man who wanted to impress his Irish friend.

Through joint sponsorship with the American Association of University Women, the VIA-VAC conducts Friends in Contact, a program through the Salinas jail to aid women inmates in adjusting to prison life, court situations and life on the outside after a period of incarceration. Volunteers may help a woman inmate solve outside problems while she is still in jail or aid her in finding housing when she is released.

The group's Project Buddy operates with a salaried project director. Mrs. Bucquet explains that this project attempts to reach children who have only one parent before the unbalanced family structure might negatively affect their lives. The project currently has 40 matched adults, 10 unmatched little buddies (seven male, three female) and 11 unmatched adult buddies.

Another project developed for an individual in need and now reinstituted for second child is the Doman-Delcate patterning of Craig Moon, a brain damaged child with cerebral palsy.

Volunteers in Action provided five volunteers three times a day, seven days a week to pattern Craig's arms, legs and head toward physical and intellectural development. Fifteen volunteers patterned Craig for 11 months, until he made so much progress he could be placed in the Gateway Development Center in Seaside. He is now enrolled at the Ashron School for Orthopedically Handicapped Children in Salinas.

In July, VIA was contacted to provide volunteers for a similar patterning program with Brian Cleary, an eight-year-old with who also has cerebral palsy. Three volunteers work twice a day, seven days a week with Brian and his mother, and recent testing at a Philadelphia Hospital showed much improvement through the patterning.

The center also operates a student volunteer center offering a credit course for high school students who work at the center and learn techniques of volunteer recruitment, interviews, placement and referral.

Projects under development by the center include: Court referral, substituting volunteer service for certain misdemeanors fines or jail terms; volunteers in corrections, involving the probation department; expanding the Seaside outreach office; Project Soledad, to provide higher educational and relate services for inmates at the Soledad training facility.

United Fund officials say they are confident their goal of $260,000 will be reached before the campaign ends.

Love gives inspiration for 'fairy tale houses'

By CHRIS KELLER

"The quaint, unique charm of Carmel ... all the rickety, kooky and crazy roof-lines that make Carmel what it is, we owe to Hugh Comstock. It was Hugh Comstock who started putting little doll houses under the oaks and pines. You could say he has done for Carmel what Steinbeck has done for Cannery Row. All this is Hugh Comstock's doing and he's never received credit for it."

As a tribute to the Comstocks, and as a result of Joanne Mathewson's interest in the Comstock homes, she has written a new book which is now circulating around Carmel. She calls it "The Fairy Tale Houses of Carmel."

The over-sized paperback book includes full page drawings of the twenty Comstock houses plus reproductions of the Affidavits of Actual Cost and Building Permits.

The drawings are whimsical. Fairy tale characters, Otsy Totsy and Raggedy Ann dolls lounge in the gardens of the homes.

As a student the author attended Westport School of Art and the American Academy of Dramatics and Arts in New York.

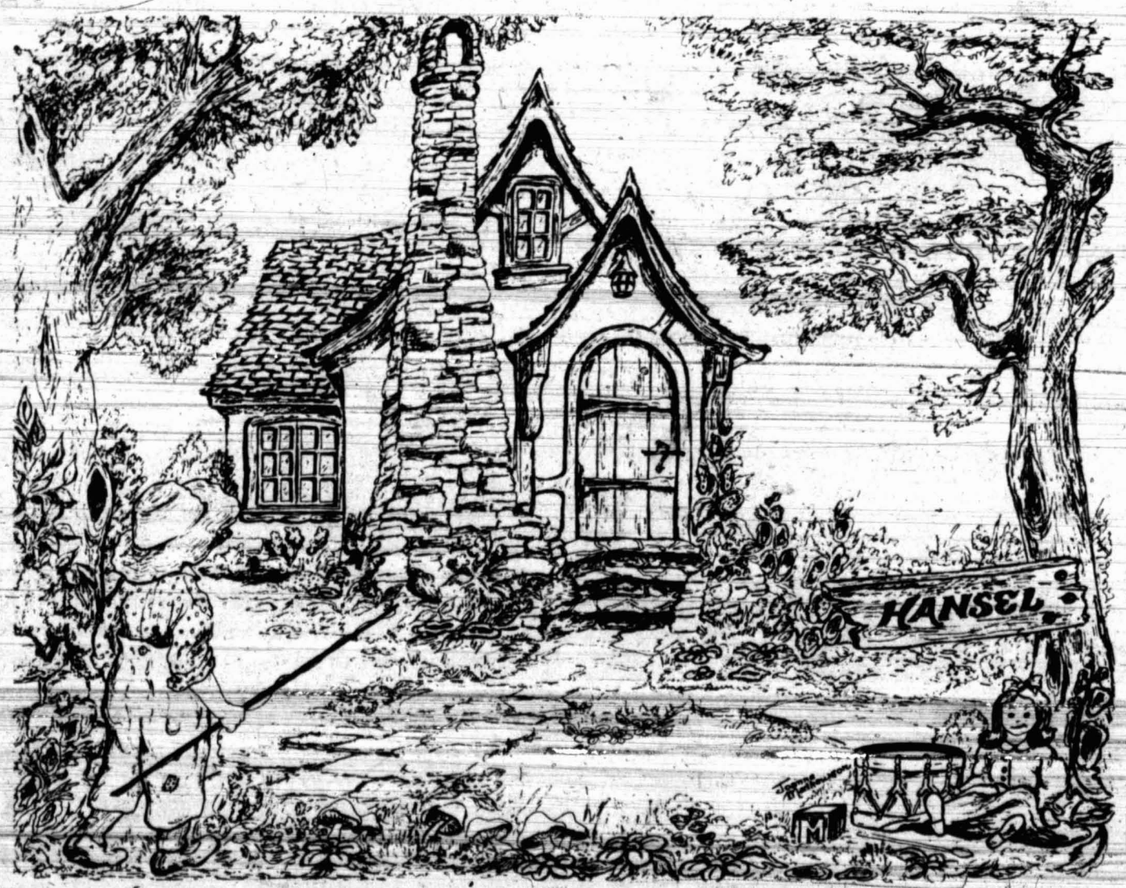

"I always enjoyed working on stage sets -- this was my attraction to the fairy tale houses. They don't look real they look like a set."

When she moved to Carmel in 1962 she and her husband designed doll houses and reproductions of antique toys. I. Magnins,

JOANNE MATHEWSON POINTS out one of the features of the Comstock homes she has sketched.

Jerome Kirk creates movement on Los Tulares ridge

Near the top of one of the rugged Los Tulares ridges, a new structure has taken its place next to a spreading, ancient oak tree. It's a pleasant looking building from the exterior but not one to arrest your eye until you see the large metal sculptures standing to the rear and on the cliff side of the house.

They move in the strong valley breezes and their gleaming metal surfaces brilliantly reflect the sheen of the sun. These shining moving metal art forms are the kinetic sculpture of Jermone Kirk who has recently completed building his home and studio to become a Valley resident.

Kirk is an anomaly so often found in this area -- people who live here but receive their income elsewhere. Kirk does all of his work in a studio in his home but his work sells in metropolitan art centers. The closest outlet for his work is in San Francisco. He is currently preparing for a show in Scottsdale, Arizona with a show in New York to follow soon afterwards.

The fact that his market is so far away from the Carmel Valley is strong evidence of how much he values the ambience of this area as a place to live and work. Of the view of the Valley he sees from his gallery - living room he says, "It is always changing, never the same. This is my aerie to which I can retreat and go completely into my work."

That statement is indicative of this artist's dedication to his work. He feels he got a late start in art and now must work double time to produce all of the art statements he wishes to make.

When you meet him, it is hard to imagine him as anything but the "compleat sculptor." A pipe-smoking lean man, his chiselled face is not handsome but qualifies as "interesting. Greying hair frames his face in a classic manner. If sculpting weren't his first love, he might have excelled at music. For relaxation he has taught himself the harmonica and does an amazing rendition of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on it.

Kirk has never had any formal art education and holds an engineering degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Although MIT is an unlikely alma mater for an artist, it serves Kirk well. To achieve the artistic expressions and movements he reaches for in his art necessitates a high degree of technical knowledge and skill. From early childhood he'd been interested in art but it wasn't until he went to an Alexander Caulder show at MIT that he recognized the medium and direction he wished to go. Originally, it was just as a hobby for which he had a deep passion.

Sculpting remained an avocation for him while he built a career in the world of technology. Even though his hours for sculpting were limited, he was able to create enough to win many awards. He also had one man shows and gained more and more recognition as an artist even though he was working full time as an executive in the businessworld.

It wasn't until 1967 that he broke loose and turned to sculpting full time.

In the few years since then, his output has been astounding. In 1968 he created "Quest," a monumental outdoor wind-driven mobile 32 feet long and weighing six tons. It is the biggest kinetic sculpture extant, almost double the size of the next largest mobile sculpture on record which was made by Alexander Calder.

He also created "Aquarius" which stands in the Union Bank Square in Los Angeles, "Phoenix Ascending" and "Tiered Orbits" for the new civic Plaza in Phoenix, "Space Galleon" for Sunrise Center in Sacramento and "Silver Orbit" for the Storm King Art Center in New York.

Such prodigious output would satisfy most artists, but Kirk is a work-a-holic and for him it was just a beginning. Simultaneously, he produced enough gallery and human sized pieces to have at least one, often two, large gallery shows a year.

To do this, he sculpts long hours each day. Taking a vacation is only relaxing the first few days and then he's restless to return to his muse. "Don't call it work," he says, "I'm a fortunate man in having the opportunity to do what I love doing each day."

His new home mirrors his total absorption in sculpture and one readily sees how the whole structure was designed and built to facilitate both the act of sculpting and the enjoyment and display of it. The living room could as easily be called a gallery and between shows may display as many as 30 pieces. The furniture is minimal and unobtrusive both for ease of upkeep and to avoid distraction from the art. The sculptures move gracefully on deepset window sills punctuating the mountaintop view, some on stands, others on the floor and walls. Even the bathroom has its mobile floating in space.

The working home, the sculptor Kirk and the sculpture itself seem intertwined, each incomplete without the other two. The remoteness of the home on the high hill gives the right setting for Kirk's saying, "The discovery of myself in sculption, I often refer to, involves a continuing expansion of a place in my mind that feels contemplative, serene and tranquil. The mental convolutions that occur at this level give me a feeling of comprehending or being closer to the essence or spirit of man."

Kirk also says about his sculpting, "I am expanding and creating a larger area within my mind which is conditioned by the feedback processes involved in my work rather than by external social and cultural forces or by the symbols of the civilized state. This is a process of becoming, of creating my own image of myself and means the freeing of my mind -- a preferential way in which I wish my mind to become free.

"For me, the manipulation of the medium forms the bridge between a dim process of comprehension of what yet is not and the finished sculpture which is the mirror of myself I look into. Every time I create a new sculpture, I see a little more of myself. This is not understanding but more significantly, self discovery. With each, the image of myself grows and the outline takes on a little more shape."

Kirk uses aluminum, cortan and stainless steel for his self discoveries, his inner images. Sometimes the surfaces are painted, other times he polishes the raw surfaces to a high sheen.

Lights gleam in the dark at this house with all the moving sculptures but not late at night -- in the tiny hours of the morning. Kirk enjoys getting up between four and five to begin his sculpting. At that hour he also is able to watch the dawn as it illuminates those large sculptures in his yard.

Limericks

There once was a confirmed old cusser,
Whose wife was a terrible fusser;
She wept and she prayed
'Til her nerves were all frayed,
But he kept getting wusser and wusser!

A shiftless young lady of Tracy
Wore clothing so holey, 'twas lacey,
'Til some of the rippage
Developing slippage,
Caused comment decidedly racey!

2 new exhibits open at Sunset

The first exhibit of 1975 for the Marjorie Evans Gallery at Sunset Center in Carmel opens on Jan. 6 and will continue through Jan. 27. It is titled, Contemporary Hungarian Graphics, and is supplied to the Gallery by the Traveling Exhibition Service of the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C.

The present range of graphic material is quite wide. It includes young, middle aged as well as older artists. The different generations reflect style for different attitudes in Hungarian arts, thus the selection is also broad in trends and artistic schools.

The exhibit is open to the public without charge from 1 to 5 p.m. daily except Saturday and Sunday. It is also open for one hour before each major performance in the Sunset Center Theatre.

In the Sunset Center Theatre foyer, an exhibit of work by artists working in Studio no. 7 at Sunset Center will be shown from Jan. 6 through Feb. 1. The studio is directed by Barbara West and Royden Martin, the former specializing in portraits and the latter in figure painting. The work of these artists will be shown along with studies by several of the students who work with them.

The exhibit is open during all performances in the Sunset Center Theatre or will be opened upon request for special showings by arrangement at the Sunset Center manager's office.

Foundation exhibits Oliphant

The Carmel Foundation is presenting an exhibition of watercolor impressions by Tom Oliphant during the month of January at the Town House's newly completed craft facility at Eighth and Lincoln streets.

The show will consist of 24 impressions of people, animals, flowers, and trees as seen by Oliphant who explains -- "I paint what intrigues my eye."

Oliphant, who was raised in the Philippines, began painting and designing furniture in that country at age 13, -- later majored in art at the University of California at Berkeley and moved to Hollywood where he became a credited set designer for Paramount studios for 20 years. He now resides in Carmel Woods where he pursues his art with local objects as his subjects.

Are you wondering what to do with the few dollars received in that surprise Christmas gift? How about investing in a little extra culture? Ten dollars would but tickets to both the Eleo Pomare Dance Company on February 6th and the Jacques D'Amboise "Ballet Encounter" performance on February 21st. Both promise to be very good shows and they should afford a great deal of pleasure. Of course, if you didn't get an unexpected gift, you would probably show that you can be terribly insouciant about the whole thing and buy a couple of tickets anyway. These two shows, as you probably remember, are the final two performances of our 1974-75 Festival of Dance Series. Good reserved seats are available at our office now.

Another treat that many of you should enjoy will be the series of seven opera films that starts on Tuesday, January 28th. In full color and with excellent sound, the films were made during actual performances of the Hamburg Opera. The first film will be Part I of Die Meistersinger at 8 p.m. on January 28. We skip February 4 and then on February 11 present Part II. Five more complete operas will follow on the five succeeding Tuesday evenings. Best of all, admission is free. The films were obtained through the courtesy of the Embassy of the Republic of West Germany. The program, we believe is a major cultural event for the year, and Sunset Center is proud to be able to offer it to you.

Other free films, especially for those who prefer afternoon to evening activity, are shown every Tuesday Noon in Room No. 20 and at 2 p.m. on the third Thursday of each month in the Sunset Center Theatre. Watch our bulletin board for the current programs or phone us at 624-3996.

There are also two exhibits now open at Sunset Center. One comes from local sources--in fact, from within our own building. It is a group of pictures by the artists and students who work in Sunset Center Studio No. 7 under Barbara West and Royden Martin. It is shown in the Sunset Center Theatre foyer during all theatre performances.

The other exhibit comes to us from the Traveling Exhibition Service of the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C. It is "Contemporary Hungarian Graphic Art" and is made up of more than 100 examples of recent graphic works. This is in the Marjorie Evans Gallery and overflows into the Bingham and Chapman Rooms which adjoin the Gallery. It is open Monday through Friday.

NEW RECORDINGS

VERDI: AIDA (Soloists, Chorus of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, The NEW PHILHARMONIA ORCHESTRA conducted by Riccardo Muti -- Angel Set SCLX-3815 (three discs).

Aida is in four acts, with a libretto by Antonio Ghislanzoni, based on a plot by Mariette Bey. Verdi wrote Aida on a commission from the Khedive of Egypt. The opera was meant for performance in a new theatre in Cairo as part of a celebration attending the opening of the Suez Canal. The theatre and the Canal were opened, as planned, in 1869, but Verdi did not finish writing Aida until 1871. The costumes and the scenery, designed and executed in Paris, had to remain there until after the end of the Franco-Prussian War (1871). The premiere was an occasion worth the delay, the audience included the cream of European and Egyptian society and royalty, Arabian trumpeters, a Cairo military band and a cast of three hundred participated in the triumphal march in the second act. Verdi, himself, was absent, as he hated all forms of publicity. The Opera was an overwhelming success; filled with pageantry, ballets, and dramatic situations, Aida was the concluding work of Verdi's second creative period. It was not only Verdi's most ambitious work so far, but his most successful attempt at achieving a natural fusion of drama and music. Because of his rich treatment of the orchestra and his avoidance of florid vocal writing, Verdi was accused by some critics of imitating Wagner. Yet, for all of its advanced techniques for that time, Aida is pure Verdi throughout--in the beauty of its Italian melodies, in the happy way these melodies lie for the voice, in the emotional intensity in the score, in the felicitous musical characterizations, and in its effective dramatic values.

This Angel recording has the following stellar cast of vocal soloists: Montserrat Caballe (soprano) as Aida; Placido Domingo (tenor) as Radames; Fiorenza Cossotto (mezzo-soprano) as Amneris; Nicolai Ghiaurov (bass) as Ramfis, Chief Priest; Piero Cappuccilli (baritone) as Amonasro; and Luigi Roni (bass) as the King of Egypt.

First, and foremost, in the role of Aida, is Montserrat Caballe, probably the outstanding lyric soprano of today. She brings to this role an aura of resplendency and excitement that lifts it into the category of penultimate presentations. Her exquisite vocalism, the purity of her tonal rention, the mesmerizing effect of her coloratura arias, and the lilting beauty of her pianissimi passages, are all elements in a performance of exceptional stature and grandeur. Of the greatest interest are her following arias: in Act I, "Ritorna vincitor;" in Act III, "O patria mia;" and her duet with Radames in Act IV, Scene 2: "Presago il coro della tua condanna," and the final emotional duet "O terra, addio."

To the role of Radames, Captain of the Egyptian Guards, Placido Domingo brings and intensity of feeling and a spiritual elevation, coupled with a tonality that is superb in all of its characteristic elements. His distinctive intonation, fine articulation, excellent diction, and beautiful modulation are just perfectly projected. Of particular effectiveness are the following arias: In Act I, the famous "Celeste Aida;" in Act III, Fuggiam gli ardori inospiti;" also in Act III, "Io son disonorato;" in Act IV, Scene 2, "La fatal pietra," and his duets with Aida in the final scene of Act IV: "O terra, addio."

Fiorenza Cossotto, in the role of Amneris, daughter of the King of Egypt, is truly one of the great and distinguished performances, both vocally and dramatically. Her vibrancy, intensity, power, and exquisite vocalism makes her evocation of this role as one of the greatest and most viable that this reviewer has heard, either "on stage," or in recorded form. This is clearly indicated by her following arias: In Act I, with Aida, "Vieni, o diletta;" in Act IV, "Ohime! morir mi sento," and "Spirito del Nume, sovra noi discendi;" in the final scene of Act IV, "Pace, t'imploro;" in her duet with Radames in Act IV, Scene 1, "Gia i sacerdoti adunansi," and "Ah! tu dei vivre."

Piero Cappuccilli as Amonasro, King of Ethiopia, is dramatic, vital, and vocally on the highest level of accomplishment. His arias: in Act II, Scene 2, "Ma tu, o Re, tu possente;" in Act III, "Non sei mia figlia" are brilliant examples of his exceptional operatic qualities.

Nicolai Ghiaurov as Ramfis, Chief Priest, is indeed a most intense and vivid protagonist in this role, and his voice accomplishes a vivid and magnificent declamation, both in tonal range as well as in histrionic stance. His arias: In Act I, Scene 2, "Nume, custode e vindice;" in Act IV, Scene 1, "Radames, e dicso il tuo fato," are in the spirit of brilliancy and effectiveness.

Luigi Roni, as the King of Egypt, has one exceptional aria and a duet that give great majesty and stature to this role. In Act I, "Su! del Nilo al sacro lido" and his duet with Amonasro and the captured slaves in Act II, Scene 2, are of the pattern of vocal and dramatic brilliancy and power. The Chorus of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden sings with splendor, vitality and bouyancy. Particularly effective are their declamations: in Act I, Scene 2, "Possente, Phtha" and in Act II, Scene 2, "Gloria all' Egitto."

The New Philharmonia Orchestra conducted by Riccardo Muti, accompanies the soloists and the Chorus with an integrated and totally coherent performance, that is musically most viable as well as dramatically compelling.

The surfaces are exceptionally quiet; the vocal and instrumental tone quality is sonorous and brilliant. In a field already crowded with recordings of "Aida," this particular Angel recording holds its own exceedingly well, and, even, is superior in two respects -- the distinguished vocal and dramatic interpretations of Montserrat Caballe and Fiorenza Cossotto.

R. STRAUSS: DON QUIXOTE--Dresden State Orchestra conducted by Rudolf Kempe with Paul Tortelier (cello) and Max Rostal (viola)--Angel S-37046).

This tone poem for orchestra was introduced in Cologne, March 8, 1898. It is subtitled "Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character," and is in three sections: Introduction, Theme and Variations, and Finale. Don Quixote is represented by a solo cello; his squire, Sancho Panza, by tenor tuba and bass clarinet, and later by a solo viola. In the introduction, Don Quixote is found in his study pouring over his chivslric lore. After an opening subject for woodwinds, a lyrical theme appears in the strings. Unrelated chords tell of the Don's growing confusion, and dissonant chords suggest his imminent madness. The theme and variation section now appears.

The theme has a mock herpic character; it is presented by the solo cello and is a description of Don Quixote. A comic idea in tenor tuba and bass clarinet represents Sancho Panza. In the ensuing ten variations we witness the various exploits of the knight errant: the fight with the windmills, the battle with sheep which appear to him like a mighty army (muted brass simulate the bleating of the animals); the skirmish with a band of pilgrims; the appearance of Dulcinea in a vision; the Don's search for the Ideal Woman (the latter found in a melody for solo cello interrupted by a cadenza for harp and strings); the attempted flight through the air on a wooden horse (in this section, Strauss introduced a wind machine); a voyage on a boat believed by the Don to have been sent him by supernatural powers (the orchestra presents a barcarolle melody); the encounter with the monks; the Don's defeat at the hands of one of his townsmen disguised as the Knight of the White Moon. The Don returns home disillusioned. In the Finale, his death is described. The Don Quixote theme in the cello is touched by tragedy. Consonant chords create a serene setting as the Don passes away peacefully.

Rudolf Kempe leads the Dresden State Orchestra, with whom Strauss had been intimately identified, in a performance of brilliance, erudition and vitality. His conception of the various sections of the work are clearly identifiable and their orchestral rendition reaches a maximum of emotional richness and tonal distinction. The thematic material is vividly and rhapsodically presented. The cantilena obbligato passages on the cello by Paul Tortelier and on the viola by Max Rostal, both eminent solo performers on their individual instruments, adds a note of scintillating and lyric intensity and nostalgia. The transparency of the orchestral projection is completely pronounced, by the Orchestra's individualized feeling for the glow and the levation of the score.

Completing the second side of this disc are R. Strauss' Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier," which the Orchestra plays with a rare feeling for the lyric beauty and rhythmic sonority, as well as with an aura of intoxication and bouyancy.

The surfaces are perfectly quiet; the sound is suavely musical, and this disc can be unreservedly recommended as a most viable presentation of this great tone poem.

FOUR TRUMPET CONCERTOS (Maurice Andre, trumpet, with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Herbert von Karajan--Angel S-37063).

In this recording, Maurice Andre performs trumpet concertos by Hummel, Leopold Mozart, Telemann and Vivaldi.

The Concerto in E flat major by J.N. Hummel has an opening movement, allegro conspirito, that is full of the classical idio, and rich in imaginative material. The slow second Andante movement is filled with passion and tenderness. The concluding Rondo observes all the traditional elements of this form, but is also rousing in its thematic material.

The Leopold Mozart Concerto in D is in two movements, with the opening section in adagio form, asserting itself calmly and forthrightly and offering the solosit opportunities for sustained cantabile playing. The second movement is an uncomplicated allegro, being spirited, and affording both soloist and orchestra and capability of delivering it with despatch and intensity.

The Telemann Concerto in D is in four movements, short and to the point. They take the form of: slow-fast-slow-fast, similar in structure to a Sonata da chiesa (church sonata).

The Vivaldi Concerto in A major is a transcription, and is in three short movements. The two fast outer sections very brief, while the inner andante movement, although somewhat longer, is still quite brief. This work shows Vivaldi at his best-vigorous melodic line and telling contrasts. Maurice Andre is probably the greatest interpreter on the trumpet of today, and, accordingly, he performs all these four concertos with a spirited approach, with absorbing sentiment, and with definitive expressiveness. As is customary with his playing, his rendition is resonantly sonorous, beautifully controlled and interpretatively distinguished. He brings an element of authenticity and involvement to his conception that makes the performance of these works a most enjoyable and compelling experience. The Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra under von Karajan is, as is well known, one of the world's great orchestral ensembles, and they furnish Mr. Andre with excellent and brilliant accompaniment.

The surfaces are technically excellent; the tonal quality is melodically suave and resonant. This disc is most highly recommended as a very fine example of what trumpet playing should be within the context of a great orchestra.

More fairy tale houses

Neiman Marcus, and Saks Fifth Avenue distributed them. From 1965 until 1973 she and her husband owned Mathewson New England Store.

"What started it all I guess was my own search for a Comstock home. They're all handmade, each is unique," explained Joanne.

Hugh Comstock and his wife, Mayotta, came to town in 1924. Mayotta made dolls, the famous Otsy-Totsy dolls, and they needed a house. In August 1924 Hugh constructed "Hansel." Many more homes were to follow. The detail on the homes is amazing and could never be duplicated today. As she states in the preface, Hugh Comstock "liked working with natural chalk rock, he hand cut every shingle and never forgot window hooks."

He built the Comstocks between 1924 and 1930. Since 1930 Comstock Associates has become one of the biggest contractors on the Monterey peninsula.

"But the Comstock Associates really doesn't know much about the early Comstocks," said Joanne.

"Really nobody knew anything about the "doll houses," so I began researching it."

She began by heading to the Carmel City Planning Department. There she got a lot of help from Robert Griggs and Ann Hagemeyer and was able to find the block and lot numbers. Most interesting are her reproductions of the Affidavits of Cost. The actual cost of the Comstock home is listed as $2,359.19.

Today the cheapest Comstock home with only 600 square feet would cost at least $55,000 Joanne estimates.

Don Berry, one of the biggest commercial contractors on the Peninsula, was sitting at a nearby table at Em Le's during this interview with Joanne. He looked at the book and remarked, "You just don't have the craftsmen and the money these days to build anything like this."

Once she located the house she would attempt to take photographs of it and sketch from those. But often the houses were hidden by trees so she sat on the property with her sketchbook.

Joanne Mathewson is definitely hooked on these original Comstocks. "It's been my dream-house since I was sixteen."

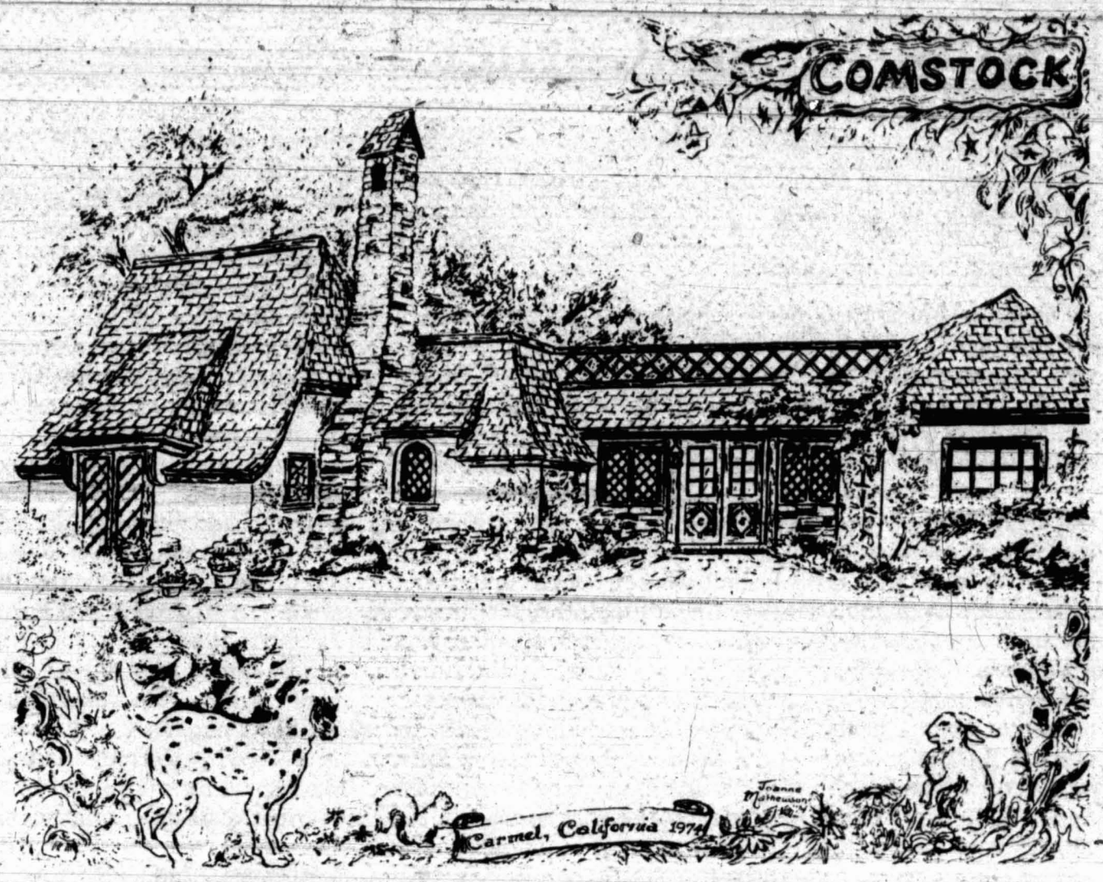

"I could not have been commissioned to do that book. It was for my love, my genuine and sincere love, for the Comstocks," she declared.

Joanne's next project will be to revive the Otsy-Totsy dolls. At one time Mayotta probably made five hundred, but Joanne has searched far and wide and not found a one.

Hugh Comstock is no longer alive but Mayotta lives in Sacramento with her sister. According to Joanne, Mayotta still has six of the original dolls and with those as models Joanne plans to go into the Otsy-Totsy business.

"Raggedy Ann did it, so can Otsy-Totsy," she exclaims.

"The Fairy Tale Houses of Carmel" is available at most local bookstores and costs $5.95.

JOANNE MATHEWSON'S DRAWING of the Comstock home where Hugh and Mayotta Comstock lived is included in her book, "The Fairy Tale Houses of Carmel."

Theatrical workshops scheduled

Actor's Repertory Theatre has announced a weekly series of theatrical workshops to help meet the needs of the Monterey Peninsula's growing theatre community. Under the guidance of three local performing artists, these workshops will focus on techniques including mime, movement, voice control, and improvisation.

Beginning Wednesday, January 8 from 7-10 p.m. at the Monterey Youth Center in El Estero Park, the workshops will offer a forum for the sharing of talent and insight of the participants. There will be no charge. For more information call 659-4004 or 372-6714 or write Actors Repertory Theatre, P.O. Box 4621 Carmel, California, 93921.

Palo Colorado today
An alternative lifestyle

KENT WHITE POSES with the Zella store sign that used to hang in the front of the store. Earlier residents in the converted home moved the sign around back when passing motorists continued to stop for cigarettes and beer. Zella's was in operation as a store in the 1950's.

Editor's Note: This second and concluding story about Palo Colorado examines the truly alternative lifestyle chosen by inhabitants of the canyon. Because of legal complications some sources of information for this story preferred to remain unnamed.

By CHRIS KELLER

A mile and a half up Palo Colorado Road in a converted wooden house that was once Zella's Store live Kent and Louise White. Kent is bearded. He divides his time between anthropology classes at MPC and chores around the house. He raises chickens that lay green eggs.

The couple receive their newspapers through the mail a day or two late. They are on an eight party telephone line. Television is not available.

The Palo Colorado Creek runs through their property and they get their water from a gravity flow system. You could say the Whites are "getting back to nature."

"Palo Colorado is not a place," says Louise, "it's a state of mind."

Given these facts you might not guess that the Whites are retired military. You might think that they are out of their milieu living in the Palo Colorado canyon. But to think this is to misunderstand the make-up of the canyon today.

"We have lived all over the world and we chose to settle here," says Louise.

For the past ten years the canyon has had a bad reputation. If it wasn't beatniks, it was hippies or junkies. That seemed to be the common belief. But today the character of the canyon has mellowed.

Hank Adams, a realtor with Lois Renk Ralty knows the area well and believes Palo Colorado is the "most cosmopolitan area around."

"You'll find all sorts of people from all walks of life in Palo Colorado, and from all economic stratas. There may be someone living in the bowl of a redwood on one side of the street, and right across from him you'll find a millionaire," he states.

Indeed, the canyon is populated by a variety of people. Young and old, lawyers, artists, musicians and retired folks. According to maps in the County Tax Assessor's office there are just about one hundred dwellings in the Palo Colorado area. The Whites opened their home up for voting during the primary and general election and figured they had about 175 people in and out.

Despite the heterogeneous nature of the population they all seem to subscribe to the same basic philosophical tenets.

Many are concerned with privacy. Most don't like city life.

As one woman explained, many of the canyon dwellers have come from either Los Angeles or San Francisco. They have moved here in the last several years to escape the city and the mode of life one associates with cities.

They give up certain conveniences that city dwellers take for granted in return for a more peaceful, less harried "country" existence.

Many would consider electricity, telephone service and decent roads necessity rather than excess convenience, but many residents have given these things up. As this woman explained, "We have the fireplace for heat and kerosene lamps and candles for light. Candlelight is much more beautiful anyway."

This couple's home is no shack. It's a modern construction of glass and wood. Picture windows look out across a broad treefilled vista. A round fireplace in the center of the living room is the home's heat source, the stove runs on gas.

The home is not always accessible. The narrow, bumpy dirt road turns to mud with the rain.

"We arrange to go into town once a week and do everything we have to that day."

Such a life style requires a certain amount of independence, ability to amuse oneself without the usual amount of diversions, friends nearby, televisions, or bars.

These people are involved in recording an album, writing a book, and putting together ideas for a film. It's more a headache to go into town once a week for groceries, than a diversion.

Another young woman has recently moved into the area. She comes from a good-sized town in the midwest. "I live up there primarily because I would rather live simply and enjoy the basic things of life. I think it's a lot better for your body and your head. She has an interesting, full-time job in Carmel and must commute forty minutes each way. Eventually she would like to stay up in the hills and live off the land by gardening and beekeeping.

"I intend to stay there the rest of my life unless it gets developed. Then I'll leave," she says.

Architectually, the canyon area seems much more varied than Carmel. The houses are either old, rustic, log cabin types, or newer, more experimental structures. These newer homes have usuallly been partially or completely constructed by the owners themselves. Their windows are odd, not standard sizes or shapes. Much of the woodwork has been done by hand. Doors were the specialty of one resident who used to live in the canyon, and several homes in the canyon have his massive, hand-hewn doors at their entries.

Although these homes appear to be very different than one would expect to find in Carmel, technically they fall under the same building codes that all structures do in Monterey County. According to County Building Inspector Jules Goetz compliance with code "irritates some of the people who want a free design home," but in the end they are usually pleased with the toned-down, building-inspector-approved, dwelling.

Domes, which came into vogue several years ago, do not have the construction advantages people assume they have, says Goeth. He points out that engineering calculations on domes for wind and earthquake are much more difficult to ascertain. In addition, window construction is more difficult, weather proofing more complicated, and heat loss more common.

A state housing law made it necessary to impose the same regulations on homes in rural areas as in the city several years ago.

"Basically for us these regulations are a headache," said Goetz. "I tried to get lesser restrictions but the county and state wouldn't go for it."

Health and safety are the reasons for the restrictions and the denser the population becomes the more important are the restrictions.

Like everywhere else, the folks in Palo Colorado canyon cringe at the word "development."

There is no subdivision planned for the area at this time, but even the intrusion of another family, one more home in the area jolts residents who are already there.

As building inspector, Goetz doesn't find it necessary to patrol the area for illegal construction because people turn each other in. In the usual effort to protect their own privacy, "one neighbor will tell on another," says Goetz.

"It's human nature to protect what you've got."

At present code requires the use of electricity if it is available. But in Palo Colorado canyon the electric lines stop at Rocky Creek.

For the past ten years the canyon has lived with a reputation for criminal activity. It's been thought to be a hide-out for hunted criminals since the days of Joaquin Murietta. More recently there have been rumors that SLA members have hidden out in the hills.

But according to the sheriff's office, the amount of reported crime in the area is not greater than anywhere else on the Peninsula or along the coast.

"We had a murder two years ago," said Seargent Shumacher, "but otherwise all we get are reports of hunting and shooting and pot growing."

"I've heard people say this was a dangerous area," said Louise White, "but I've only heard of two incidents."

"At one house someone broke in -- but all they did was eat. They cleaned out the refrigerator. Someone broke into another house around here and all they did was play records," she laughed.

The reputation of the area, as well as other factors have held real estate prices down and small parcels can still be purchased at $1,000 an acre.

The feeling in the canyon is not one of real "community" primarily because its residents prefer to keep to themselves.

"You're friendly with your immediate neighbors, don't know most of the other folks, but everybody waves regardless when they go down the road," said Kent White.

States Hank Adams, "The canyon used to be a retreat for a lot of street people. Today we have, I don't know how to say it exactly, but I guess you'd call them modern day bohemians. There has really been a tremendous change in the last few years."

"Now there are people up there who really love the canyon."

A DOME HOUSE under construction on the Palo Colorado canyon road is typical of the free-style architecture that exists in the canyon.

SANTA CLAUS, PLAYED by Selden Smith, presents a gift to American Red Cross Chairman of Volunteers, Catharine Harriman, while Margaret Burgess, board secretary and Lucille Warren, board member, look on at the Carmel chapter's Christmas tea. The three women were co-chairmen of the affair.

Red Cross holds Christmas tea party

Carmel Chapter board members of the American National Red Cross held their annual Christmas Tea for active Red Cross volunteers recently in the Chapter House at 8th and Dolores.

Co-chairwomen for the tea were, Mrs. James Burgess, Mrs. Van Court Warren and Mrs. Dale Harriman, assisted by Mrs. F.M. Scott, and Mrs. Harold E. Snow, Jr. Pouring the tea and coffee were Mrs. F. John Davey, and Miss Dorothy James.

Santa Claus and his helper were surprising guests at the door by greeting them with gifts of candy canes,

Christmas music was played throughout the party and guests viewed the green tree donated by the Quentels of Carmel Valley and decorated with bright stuffed red felt crosses and candy canes tied with red ribbons.

Board members Mike Stanton and James Heisinger who are co-chairmen in charge of the maintenance of the chapter house were present. The mothers of both men have been active in Red Cross work for years, Mrs. Robert Stanton was formerly the chapter chairman, and Mrs. Heisinger was attired in her uniform while working as the active office aide. During the party Mrs. Heisinger showed Jim how she checks on the items in the Loan Closet when requests come in for aides to the sick and injured. This equipment consists of hospital beds, canes, crutches, wheel chairs, commodes, baby cribs, walkers, and adjustable tables which are loaned at no cost to the patient. (Most have been donated.)

Chapter chairman, Eben Whittelsy and his new dog, Treena, arrived about the same time as 1974 Fund Drive Chairman Mrs. Leland Cagwin who has consented to assume the same job in 1975. Mrs. Philip Walker, Carmel Valley representative and

Trivia is not trivial

All my life I have been fascinated by recondite and bizarre information, sometimes useless, occasionally glamorous, often nostalgic, always exciting, never dull. Now I find myself a veritable storehouse of trivia. Probably no human being of any other country, except the tropical nation of Zaire, famous for its hot air could regurgitate so much which up to the publication of this essay was regarded as ha! ha! ho! hum or holy.

The average intellectual goes to college to study only those subjects which will enable him to make a living. Not the trivia expert. He is motivated by the purest motives - acquiting knowledge for its own sake. After all, how many master and bachelor degrees know the closing words of 'Finnegans Wake,' the powers involved in the Pragmatic Sanction, the past subjunctive of moneo, or the number of Wimbledon titles won by Helen Wills O'Roark of Carmel.

The lover of trivia is the complete Renaissance humanist interested in and knowledgeable of the world around him and as a consequence is a superior man, a member of the cognoscenti, of those savants who are always in the know. Once you have become one of this elitist group and have tasted the power which omniscience confers, you have never the same person. Your eye becomes jaundiced, your detachment philosophical, and your air cultivated. No longer do T.V. commercials, politicians or encyclopedia salesmen engage your credulity. Critical of what you read and hear, liberated from the dogmas and shibboleths of family, church, and neighborhood, you have become not only an analyst of the abstract but a man of the world. Just imagine a Zen Buddhist, Transcendental Meditator, hepped-up hippie, Cybernetic cultist, Jesus freak who tries to bother you with his evangelical attentions. You simply take the sting out of him with "What's the capital of North Dakota?"

Yes nothing is ever the same - for example:

Politics. You learn that all politicians aren't venal. Indeed trivia researchers can give you the names of some honest representatives of the people from the minutiae of their memory banks.

Presidents and Vice Presidents: J. Rutherford Hayes-censored; F.D. Roosevelt - censored; W. Harding - censored; R.M. Nixon - In flagrante delicto; C. Coolidge - censored.

Religion. One's traditional beliefs are irrevocably altered when one learns that Martin Luther had piles, Pope Alexander VI had Lucretzia Borgia, and Billy Graham had Liberace to tea.

Think too, of the fun the esoteric experts will have thirty years from now, like----.

In the 1970's President Nixon recorded on tape all the clandestine conversations of a criminal conspiracy to misuse the office of the presidency in order to facilitate better the uncovering of his criminality, his subsequent impeachment, and removal from office. This will be so unbelievable as to be relegated to the researchers of arcane trivia.

or----

In the 1970's the price of oil in the United State soared. Every economic and political theory was offered to the American public to enable them to suffer expensive 'fuels' gladly except the truth, that despite all warnings by the oil producing Arab states, we continued to aid and abet Israel militarily and politically. This trivial omission would not, of course, excape the twenty-first Century trivia historian.

I'm sure you have heard enough and have got the idea. For those who would like to qualify as men or women of the world, here is a test quiz. Nine or ten correct - consider yourself a well-rounded modern Renaissance man. Seven to eight - there's hope. Five to six - lacking in culture. Less than five - back to barbarism.

TRIVIA TEST

1) Name four of the five actor occupants of John Ford's 'Stagecoach.'

2) The pirate song on page one of 'Treasure Island.'

3) Who led the English fleet which defeated the Spanish Armada?

4) The owners of these four famous horses a) Pegasus. b) Bucephalus. c) Incitatus. d) The Pie.

5) Name the ice cream sold by the Marx Brothers in "A Day at the Races?"

6) The sister of Baron Richfoten, the Red Baron, the great German air ace of World War One, married one of the great writers of English Literature. Who was he?

7) President Ford's real family surname?

8) What sports champion made more money out of this skill than any other sports figure of any other sport in history?

9) This world renowned statesman and leader was an American citizen. His father, an English Lord, died of syphilis. His mother, born an American, married three times and was mistress to a king, Edward VII. Her third marriage at sixty four was to a man of forty one, three years younger than her son - the world renowned statesman.

10) What American writer's wife, the beautiful and talented couterpart, of the heroines of his famous novels, was burned to death in a mental home?

REMEMBER WHEN?

50 YEARS AGO:

From the Pine Cone
January 10, 1925

The art of listening is an almost forgotten art -- a sleeping art. If it were not, all Carmel to a man would turn out on Monday night to be hear Robert Roe. We would all leave our firesides and regret as when we go to the Arts and Crafts or the Forest Theatre or the Golden Bough. We should want to hear a new poet talking about poetry, reading his poems and the poems of his friends and contemporaries if our ears were not all a little dulled to the joy of hearing the human voice speaking in rhythm. It's our misfortune, not our fault. We have too many printed books. We have too few traveling troubadours. We are accustomed to seeing a poem rather than hearing it, so we lose, as deaf people do, much of the conversation that goes on between nature and human nature. Often a poem, that has died upon the page comes to life through the voice, and lives on in the memory of the listener. The modern poets are beginning to know this. Vachel Lindsay, Carl Sandburg, Amy Lowell go about the world reading their poems aloud, and people come awake surprised -- awake to modern poetry, to the simplicity of it, the humor, the nearness to common life.

Three prominent residents of Carmel -- Dr. Amelia L. Gates, Miss Tilly Polak and Johan Hagemeyer -- are planning to invade the wilds of Mexico, each in the interest of their own particular field.

They promise to return to Carmel laden with treasures, to-wit: The yellow fever bacillus, the dust of antiquities and the renaissance of decadent Mexican art.

Good luck to the heroic adventurers!

25 YEARS AGO:

From the Pine Cone
January 6, 1950

"It was cooold," Clyton Neill reported, "So we got through our work as soon as possible."

The Carmel Library Board met in the closed-for-construction-purpose library Tuesday afternoon and received the report of the contractor, who says the work of building the addition will be completed by the end of the month. At the present moment all the big jobs are done: walls, roof, even two coats of plaster. Lights are installed. All that is left is the finishing work, and then there can be a housewarming for the new wing.

Dr. Martin Flavin, Jr. looking every other inch the young research scientist, strolled in upon us the other day, having flown from New York for a few days at home. The alternate inches of Martin are all home-town Carmel. In fact, until we pinned him down with an old dull pencil and that give-and-give look, he was so glad to be here somewhere west of 168th street, New York City, that he was every inch and a pair of old slacks, on of our town.

Volunteer and regular firemen, 24 strong, rushed for an early morning rescue of the building occupied by the Pine Cone on December 31. Summoned at 7:15, the group had everything under control by 8 o'clock.

The cavern the California Water and Telephone Company has started digging down on Mountain View is going to wander crazy-like diagonally across the City Park, and take off from there to come at Pescadero Canyon, at the borderline of Carmel and Pebble Beach.

10 YEARS AGO:

From the Pine Cone
January 7, 1965

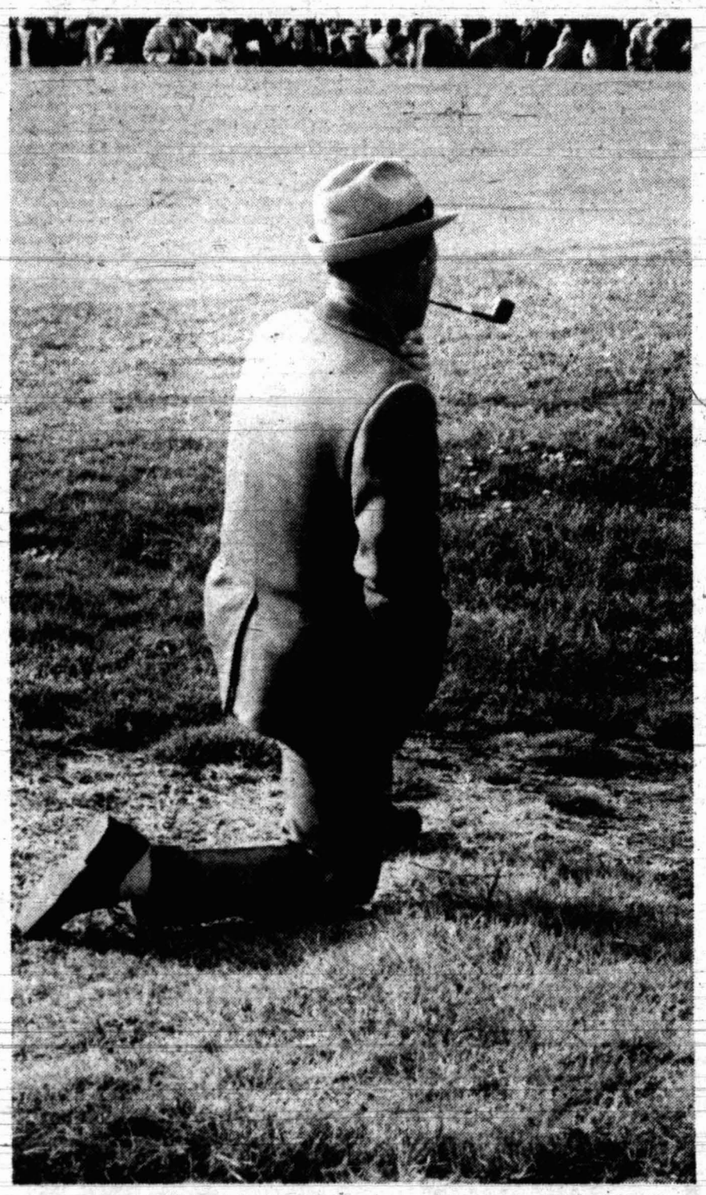

Protests against the rezoning of 33 acres across from Mission Fields for a commercial center were presented to the Monterey County Board of Supervisors on Monday by 11 persons either in letters or in telegrams. Gunnar Norberg of Carmel spoke against the rezoning as did Robert C. Gilmour of Mission Fields and Rear Admiral C.W. Fisher representing the board of directors of the Carmel Citizens Committee.

Requests for delay on the rezoning came in writing from Colonel George A. Brown, president of the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association, and, in person, from Mrs. Barbara Sherman.

Supervisors, however, approved the rezoning for Carmel Center which will be developed at an estimated cost of $6 million by Carmel Properties Company consisting of William L. Hudson, Charles Fuller and Francis Brown.

City officials and other prominent citizens attended the opening of Carmel's newest bank on Monday. An impressive ribbon-cutting ceremony, with Mayor Herbert Blanks cutting the ribbon, preceded the open house which will last through Saturday. During this time coffee and cookies will be served to the public. The new bank is the first Peninsula-owned bank to open in Carmel in 41 years.

34th Crosby Pro-Am draws near

BING CROSBY WATCHES in one of the annual Crosby Pro-Am tournaments.

January 20 will be a big day for the Peninsula and for golf fans across the country, as qualifying rounds begin for the 34th annual Crosby Pro-Am Tournament.

Thursday, Jan. 23 will be even bigger, as 336 golfers take the field on Pebble Beach, Cypress Point, and Spyglass Hill courses.

This year's tournament has been scheduled somewhat later than last year's, and tournament officials hope that the weatherman will be more cooperative. When the prestigeous field readied to tee off on Jan. 3, 1974, the sky opened in a downpour which lasted for a full five days.

With fairways inundated by rain, tournament officials were forced to call things to a halt after 54 holes of play.

Barring similar conditions this year the tournament will go for the traditional 72 holes.

The field of 168 professionals and 168 amateurs will rotate play on the three courses Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Foursomes will tee off from the first and tenth tees on all three courses starting at 7:15 a.m.

On Sunday the 25 low teams and the 60 low professionals will play Pebble Beach. A total of $215,000 in prize money will be at stake this year ($185,000 in the professional division, and $30,000 in the pro-am division). Action on Saturday and Sunday will be broadcast on nationwide television.

Johnny Miller, last year's winner, will return. Along with him, of course, will be the biggest names in the world of golf including, Jack Nicklaus, Gary Player, Tom Weiskopf, and Doug Sanders.

Celebrities too, will be on hand. While the roster has not yet been completed, tournament planners expect such entertainers as Flip Wilson, Mac Davis, Bob Newhart, Andy Williams, and James Garner. As always, Bing Crosby will preside.

Dan Searle, president of the Crosby Youth Fund, emphasizes that the tournament is a charitible event. He explained that last year's tournament brought in $180,000 dollars for various charities. That figure brought total charitable donations from the tournament over 33 years to roughly $3 million.

"We really didn't raise that much last year. About $50,000 came through rain insurance. This year, with good weather, we expect to do much better," Searle said.

Environment classes scheduled at MPC

Many Peninsula residents are vitally concerned with issues relating to the environment. With this in mind, Monterey Peninsula College has developed a core of environment-related courses which will be offered in the spring semester which starts the week of Feb. 3.

Mail registration is now in progress and the application deadline is Jan. 15.

Vince Bradley, director of continuing education, said the courses range from basic organic gardening to large questions regarding man's very survival in the future.

Spring courses on the environment include the following:

Biology 169, "Man in the Environment," Chemistry 110, "Environmental Chemistry," Economics 604, "Environmental Economics," English 611, "Communication: Visual & Verbal," Georgraphy 102, "Introduction to Cultural Geography," Meteorology 110, "Introduction to Meteorology," Oceanography 110, "Introductory Oceanography."

Oranmental Horticulture 205, "Trees," Ornamental Horticulture 604, "Organic Gardening," Real Estate 625, "Community Environmental Design," Sociology 195, "Images of the Future," Sociology 653, "Man Builds -- Man Destoys," a TV course and Sociology 654, "Man Builds -- Man Destroys, Field Studies."

Switzerland today:

Next Explorama feature

Switzerland, a country that has long been famous for its spectacular scenery and storybook charm has a great deal more to offer to the rest of the world according to travel-adventure film producer, Willis Butler.

Butler says that in our age of global unrest, this highly industrialized little country remains relatively untouched by the ills of crime, social upheavels, war and unemployment and might well offer an example for the rest of the world.

"Switzerland Today" will be screened, with its producer Willis Butler present to narrate the film, at 8:15 p.m. Friday, Jan. 10 at the Sunset Center Auditorium.

To what does Butler attribute the prosperity and tranquility of Switzerland? "It has everything to do with a Swiss attitude or philosophy of life that I call the "Swiss perspective" that has allowed the Swiss to survive 600 years of democracy in spite of the fact that Switzerland is made up of very diverse cultures."

Butler and his wife Ruth, who accompanied him on his photographic journey to Switzerland, make their home on the shores of Lake Michigan in Racine, Wisconsin. He has been producing professional films since 1953 and prior to that was a radio announcer in the Chicago area. His travels have taken him to virtually the four corners of the world and he has had private audiences with such world figures as Emperor Haile Selassie, President Gamel Abdel Nasser and Ireland's Eamon DeValera.

He and his wife had visited Switzerland before, "and like most photographers," he says, "I always wanted to make a film there." So during the summer of 1973 as the official guest of the Swiss government, the Butlers spent three months on location in Switzerland doing the photography for the film. Jean Luc Rimez, a student from Fribourg and a former field student who had spent a year in Texas during the 1971-72 academic year, acted as their guide and interpreter. He spoke English, French and Swiss German and traveled with the to Zurich, Lucerne, the Rhine Falls, the Federal Capital of Bern, Lugano, Vico Morcote, St. Moritz, Montreux, Geneva, Zermatt, and the Matterhorn.

The film includes a sequence that was shot inside one of the three largest banks of Switzerland, The Union Bank in Zurich showing its vast Cold Vault and the bank's direct transatlantic teletype to New York which is used for the buying and selling of golf.

Butler was especially enthused with the sports activities in Switzerland, and thinks that sports are a very important part of the "Swiss perspective." Various sporting events are shown in the film including summer skiing and ice skating, mountain and glacier climbing and hiking, and horseback riding. Also featured is the renowned mountain climbing school of Arnold Glatthard which was founded 34 years ago.

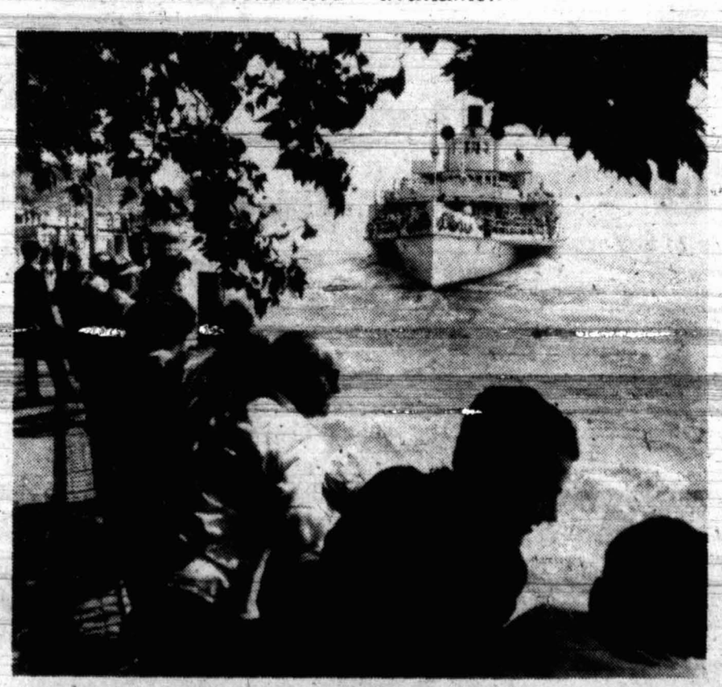

Just to remind us that there still are quaint, out-of-the-way villages, a sequence was shot in the picturesque village of Guarda, where life goes on today much as it has for hundreds of years and the village folk still wear colorful costumes and their cows are decorated with unusual bells.

Butler sums up by saying, "Switzerland is such a beautiful and civilized place and the Swiss have a good, healthy, well balanced attitude about themselves and the rest of the world. They have solved many of the problems than still confront the rest of the world."

Reserved seat tickets are now on sale at all Macy's stores, Abinate Music Store in Monterey and Julia Marlowe Box Office in Carmel. A special reduced price series ticket is also available.

Pinky wants to stay home

By Michael Butowitsch

People from all over the world would like nothing better than to live in Carmel. Usually one visit to the village will inspire a lifelong desire to live here. Sometimes, people seek to live here strictly on reputation.

Whatever the reason, once the Carmel bug has bitten, people come here to stay and are fiercely protective of their residency. The ocean, trees, climate and quaintness all help round out the wonder and attractiveness of Carmel.

Now, unless a miracle occurs, it seems that one of Carmel's longtime resident families will have to leave.

After 20 years of living in Carmel, Elwood "Pinky" Dukes, and his wife Avis have been served an eviction notice from the house they have rented for the past 12 years, near the corner of San Carlos and 1st streets. They have until Jan. 9 to find a new home. Their landlord sold the house.

Pinky and Avis aren't wealthy people. They don't require much and were happy living here in an old, two bedroom house. Most of their friends live in Carmel.

Their children, Sharon and Martin, were educated in Carmel schools. Sharon is now married and living in Portland, Ore. Martin currently attends Stanislaus State College and comes home for weekends.

To say that Pinky and Avis have planted their roots in Carmel is an understatement. Twenty years provides many memories, and deep, deep roots.

Pinky and Avis came here in 1952 from Berkeley. Pinky had been an athletic trainer, taping ankles and knees. They worked for the Beach Club in Pebble Beach. Now Avis works for a bakery in a supermarket. Pinky works a couple of hours a day with handicapped students at Monterey Peninsula College. Pinky's fondest dream is to work fulltime in adaptive physical education. This desire to work with handicapped people stems from his background in physical education and his own handicap. Pinky is blind.

Pinky's blindness resulted from a gradual deteroration of the retina. He can still "see" light, but for all intents and purposes his blindness is total. About two and one-half years ago, Pinky brought home a guide dog. The yellow Labrador Retriever, Ivan, has guided Pinky on long walks through the village, to the Post Office or just out for an afternoon cup of coffee.

PINKY DUKES IS shown standing in the living room of the house he's recently been evicted from. Though totally blind, Pinky wears glasses as a protective covering for his eyes.

PINKY DUKES SITTING at home with his guide dog, Ivan.

Out of both love and necessity, Pinky and Ivan know as much about Carmel, perhaps more, than most residents. Winding streets with trees in the middle, curbs, people, cars and other obstacles are familiar to Ivan by sight and Pinky by memory, instinct and touch.

Now Pinky faces a difficult adjustment period. When they move, both Pinky and Ivan will have to be retrained, or familiarized with wherever they go. It can and will be done, but moving is not something Pinky looks forward to.

"We've been sitting here for 12 years and enjoying it. It's one of those adjustment periods. You have to take one problem at a time," Pinky said quite matter-of-factly.

It's easy to sense Pinky's frustration. He and Avis have searched for a home in Carmel with no luck. They can't afford to pay more than $200 per month, for a house, preferably a two bedroom.

"We've tried everything, realtors, friends -- everybody we know," but still no luck says Pinky. They have contacted the Carmel Foundation to no avail.

Pinky feels no animosity towards the landlord. "Finding another house is our responsibility," he says, but wishes the search were more fruitful.

Pinky is not seeking charity. He and Avis have taken care of themselves and will continue to. But if a rental unit were available, he would welcome a call at 624-4997.

After 28 years of marriage, 20 spent in Carmel, Pinky and Avis, along with Ivan, face the unwelcome prospect of leaving their home. They may have to move to Seaside, where rents are more affordable for them. Pinky's determination has helped him overcome problems in the past. Seaside isn't Carmel but he'll work with it. "That's right, what else can you do?"

Gold is now available at the bank that began with the Gold Rush.

If ever a firm was founded on gold, it's Wells Fargo. We were born during the Gold Rush, served as the miners' express company, postal service, assayer and bank, and shipped more gold East than anybody else. .

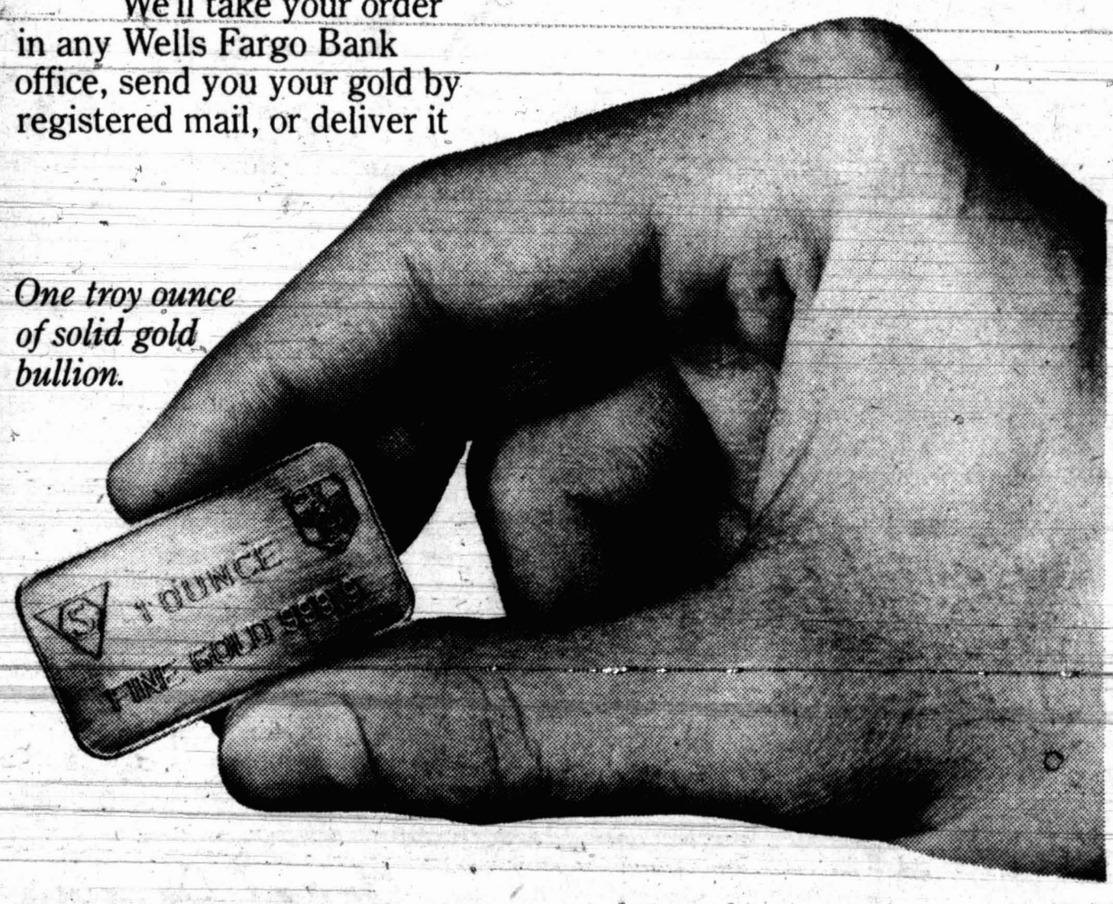

In the early 1900's Wells Fargo carried the world's largest gold brick (218 lbs.) from Dawson (Y.T.) to Selby, Calif.

Now, gold is available from Wells Fargo again. Solid gold bullion bars in denominations of 1,5,10 or more ounces, sold at the market rate plus a commission of 8% and tax. However, before purchasing you should consider that an investment in gold, which is a commodity, provides no interest to the investor, who must depend on price appreciation to provide any yield.

We'll take your order in any Wells Fargo Bank office, send you your gold by registered mail, or deliver it to you personally at that office. We can even safeguard your gold for you You can rent a safe deposit box at a Wells Fargo office, or receive a certificate of ownership and let us keep your gold for safe keeping in our central vault. You'll be trusting your gold to the same firm that the miners trusted with theirs.

Your nearest Wells Fargo Bank has all the information about how to order and buy gold from Wells Fargo.

One troy ounce of solid gold bullion.

Radio license course set

The Naval Postgraduate School (NPS) Amateur Radio Club will start an amateur radio license course Jan. 22. The course is open to the public.

The class will lead to attaining a novice class license and will last about 6 to 8 weeks. It will be held at 7:30 p.m. every other Wednesday in Spanagel Hall, room 200 on campus.

The NPS Amateur Radio Club currently has 40 members, most of which are active on long range ham frequencies. About half the club members are active on short range UHF frequencies and use a radio repeater station which they designed and built. The repeater is located at the MPTV-Ch 13 facility on Huckleberry Hill in Pebble Beach. Since the cable television company provides the repeater with emergency power, the amateur system is a ready emergency communications system for Monterey County should the need arise. The repeater covers an area from Santa Cruz to Salinas and has many users in both cities.

For those interested in the NPS Amateur Radio Club, it meets on the second Thursday of every month at 7:30 p.m. in Spanagel Hall, room 200 on campus.

Some New Year's resolutions

'Tis the season for New Year's resolutions.

At the Village Corner sat Jose Chubet, artist, in a torn, plastic, spray-paint gold coat.

"My New Year's resolution will be to get a new coat, I think," says Jose.

Tom Taylor at the next table said he'd "try and be a better man in every way.

"Put in that I'll love my wife more also."

Alice M. Wright says, "Let's just try and get out of this depression."

Echoing those sentiments was Sam Dean who sighed, "I hope I can do better next year and the price of living goes down."

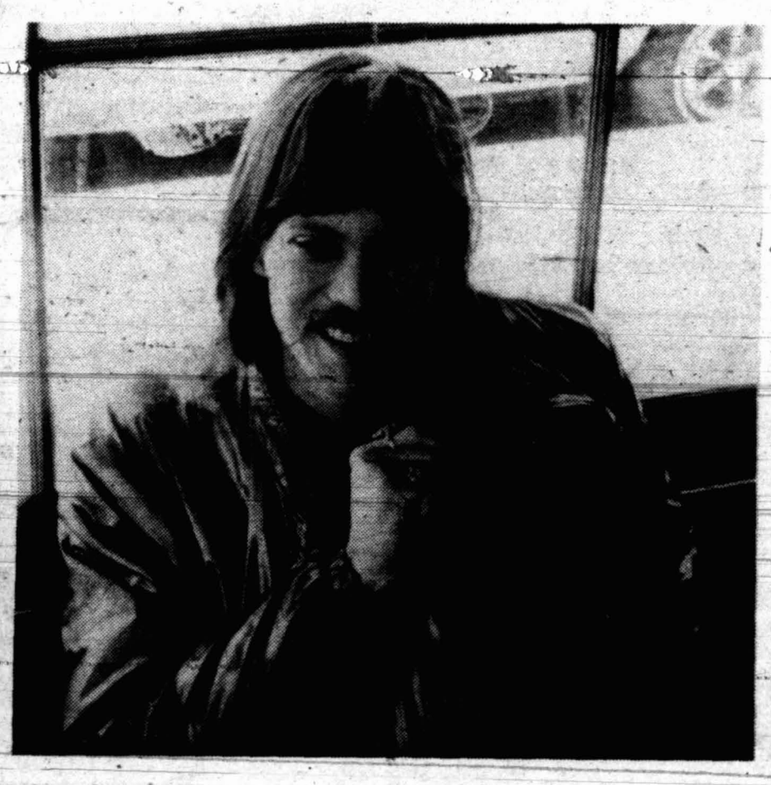

Speaking of which, down the street at Kidder Peabody, the men in suits and ties were just too busy to think about resolutions. Finally Jim Jacquin made a business-like comment, "My New Year's resolution is to make 1975 a financially prosperous year."

Over at Books Inc. Joe Regelski says "I'd like to see Nixon jailed in solitary confinement the rest of his life."

"That's not a resolution," someone else said.

"I know, it's a vendetta," says Joe.

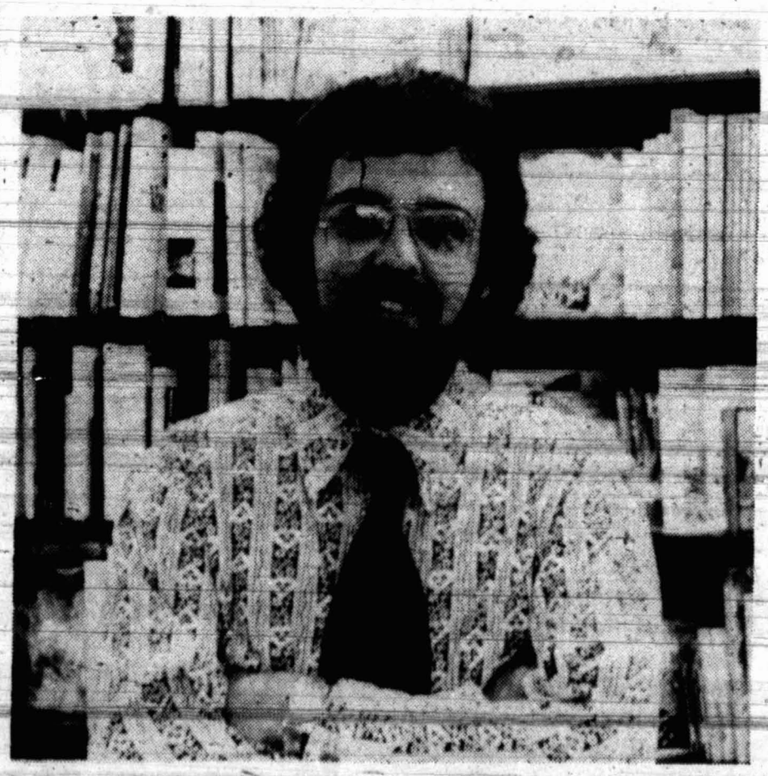

Bob Burke high-flyer who hangs out at the Bully III resolves faithfully "not to make greater than 45 degree banks with passengers who have never flown in light aircraft."

Jose Chubet '...a new coat, I think

Tom Taylor '...be a better man...'

Joe Regelski

Enjoy these Swiss dishes

By PHYLLIS JERVEY

Snow-capped Alps, brilliantly blue lakes, story book villages, fashionable hotels, excellent educational advantages this is "Switzerland Today" which will be shown by travel-adventure film producer Mr. Willis Butler as the first program of the 1975 Explorama series. On Friday Jan. 10 at 8:15 p.m. this up-to-date feature takes place at Carmel's Sunset Auditorium in living color so realistic it is next to being in my favorite foreign country. For I was brought up in Lausanne, that city of unforgettable scenic views.

As Mr. Butler, who will narrate his spectacular film in person for us, attributes the tranquility and prosperity of Switzerland to the Swiss attitude that has survived 600 years, we will learn much from our arm-chair travels.

How about a shortened menu, gay and informal, before or after the showing? Fondue originated in the early 1800's outside Switzerland as a famed chef's discovery because he doted on Swiss cheese for breakfast. Like most great dishes this was from practical necessity not haute cuisine. Fondues have a way unusual with most hare-the-pot congeniality; they are economical yet surprising-appealing. The Swiss use a pottery caquelon and long-handled fork inherited for generations but any earthen pot or any fork will suffice.

Dr. Stevens Tucker and his Swiss wife Jeanine now start the fondue on top of their stove for quick melting of finely cut Swiss and Gruyere. These Carmelites then transfer same to pre-heated chafing dish kept bubbling gently over low burner. Carmel's shops have a wide selection of fondue-type containers where one can also find the modernistic packaged instant fondue.

We prefer making our own Fondue Neuchâteloise serving four. One lb. Swiss cheese, shredded or small-sliced, 3 Tbsps. cornstarch, 1 clove garlic, 2 cups dry white wine, 1 Tbsp. lemon juice, 3 Tbsps. kirsh, brandy or cognac, pinch of white pepper, salt to taste. Rub pot with split peeled garlic, pour in wine, set over lowest heat. Dredge cheese with cornstarch adding gradually with rest of items. Stir in same direction. Each spears crusty bread bite-sized pieces on his or her fork and voila a superb experience.

There is an amusing rule that who loses his crust in the mixture must relinquish his turn while the others eat, drink, and laugh heartily. Be watchful or you will be asked to yodel or making like a chamois. A Carmel neighbor of ours says the trouble about fondue at Neil De Vaughn's restaurant is that he goes after their fondue so voraciously as an appetizer that there isn't any room for more! Mr. De V. lives in Carmel High Meadows and we ask him not to change size or quality of his own special brand.

With this supper we only serve at home a Crispy Red Salad. Mix together 2 cups finely shredded red cabbage, ½ cup thinly sliced sweet anise bulbs, celery or cauliflower with 2 Tbsps. minced onion. Refrigerate. At serving mix with a very tart cold French dressing. Makes 4 ample servings.

Some would rather have a Mont Blanc dessert made of roasted chestnut purée topped with whipped cream to resemble that majestic peak. However a dessert prepared-ahead is more simple. Helvetia Apricot Bred: Soak one & ¼ cups dried apricots, 1½ cups dried prunes (pitted) overnight. Next day put through medium blade of food chopper with 1 cup walnuts. Season with sugar, powdered nutmeg, cinnamon, cloves, salt to taste. Put 2 cups flour into mixing bowl, cut in ½ cup butter. Combine with water until smooth dough is formed. Roll out between waxed paper placing fruits in between. Bake in moderate oven about an hour. Cool and slice at table.

Did we say this is simple & easy? For the Swiss yes. But in my youth there were always those tempting lovely chocolate bars. This is a mutual remembrance of my Carmel bachelor pal Nickola who has lived by the Lac Leman many years. We both like hot chocolate at night. It induces sleep without pills. Heat 2 cups milk, ½ cup chocolate-flavored syrup, 2 cups coffee, ½ cup milk. Heat but do not boil. Beat & sprinkle cinnamon with a fine lacing of spirits.

So on to Carmel's Cultural Center Auditorium.

Third Thursday film series sets 'Ulysses'

The fifth of ten scheduled THIRD THURSDAY MATINEE FILM PROGRAMS is scheduled for Jan. 16 at 2 p.m. in Sunset Center Theatre.

The January film is "Search for Ulysses" and was produced for the National Georgraphic television series. Ernie Bradford, British sailor and scholar whose book "Ulysses Found," inspired this film, goes on a journey of discovery and finds that the Ulysses of the myth really lived and that his adventures took place on existing islands. To add a note of humor, the program will open with the famous W. C. Field's comedy, "The Barber Shop."

The THIRD THURSDAY programs are presented on the third Thursday of each month from September through June under the joint sponsorship of Sunset Center and Monterey Peninsula College. All programs begin at 2 p.m. and there is no charge for admission.

The series was planned especially for senior citizens who prefer afternoon to evening events. However, everyone is welcome at attend. Many of the films will be of interest to school students, and teachers are encouraged to bring their classes to those programs which bear any relation to their school classes.

Lines from Lois

Whatever you promised, let this be the year you give her Carmel!

Give Her A Carmel Sunset,
... Sandpipers on the early morning beach ... the wonderful "clean" smell in the air ... 5,592 Monterey pine trees and 3,068 oak trees, 1,232 acacias and 490 cypress (inside the city limits). Giver her bird songs in the morning and moonlight on the water and squirrels to feed and racoons to watch. Give her the white sand beaches, and time to walk on them, and a dog to walk on them with her.

And Give Her Quaint Shops
to browse and artists and craftsmen to provide delightful things to look at, and a public library with a fireplace which is USED ... fascinating people from all over the world for her neighbors ... symphonies to hear and ballet to watch, or auto races, or golf matches, or dog or horse shows.

Let Her Have Pt. Lobos and lots of live theater and seven o'clock in the morning at Fisherman's Wharf in Monterey. Let her have the cool mist of the beaches or the sunshine of the Valley. Let her take the classes in anything she wants to learn from Greek to sculpturing.

Expense?
Most of it is free unless you buy a fish from the wharf markets or things in the shops. (If she acts or works in production, she can have free tickets to most everything in the theater line). (And the dog is waiting at the animal shelter.)

It's All Part of the Good Life
in the Carmel area. As to where you'll live, we have homes priced from $45,000 on up. We have homes in the sunshine and homes in the shade, on the rocky coast, in the forest, up on the hills and down in the valleys -- all of them accompanied by all of the above mostly free items. And if you can afford the very best, we have some of the finest Carriage Trade homes on the Pacific Coast. And beautiful, beautiful lots!

If You Left It Out Of Her Stocking this Christmas, give her Carmel in the coming year. May we help you?

Crocker offers 3 fine gold plans with one word of caution:

Crocker Bank believes that any investment should be made only after thoughtful and prudent consideration. This is especially true with gold. Market conditions for any commodity are constantly changing. And besides the obvious risks involved, an investment in gold doesn't earn interest.

But whether you're someone who has always been attracted to the idea of owning gold, or someone interested in a large or small investment... once you've decided gold is for you, buy from a reputable source only.

We'll be offering three ways to invest:

First, you can take actual possession of the gold. In this case, you'll have to find safe storage, and pay sales taxes and assay costs if you sell again. Most buyers will demand proof of authenticity (assay) unless the gold is in the custody of a recognized financial institution such as Crocker Bank.

Gold bullion in denominations of 1/2 ounce to 100 ounces is now available at Crocker. We are one of the few sources offering the 1/2 and 1-ounce denominations that allow the average person to invest within their means.

Second, you may simply accept a receipt for your gold. Your investment will be safely tucked away in our vault, saving you unnecessary assay costs later.

Third, you may accept a certificate. Your gold will be safely stored at a major Canadian bank. You'll avoid all shipping charges, insurance, sales taxes and future assay costs. Certificates are available from 5 ounces in increments of 5 ounces.

For some interesting historical facts and information on the risks and rewards of gold, write us at this address: Crocker Bank, Gold Marketing Dept., P. O. Box 38000, San Francisco, Calif. 94138. We'll send you a copy of our gold brochure.

Whether you look upon gold as a useful emergency reserve and inflation hedge or as a highly speculative commodity, if you've chosen to buy, buy from someone who can give you a choice. Crocker Bank.
